It was in 1798 that the Ottoman Porte first became alarmed at the successes of the Wahabis, and sent a strong force against them, by which they were driven back into their deserts; but this triumph was but of short duration, for Sa'ud avenged his defeat, and in 1801, the time of the pilgrimage which the Sheiks or adherents of Ali make to the Mesched Hosein (tomb of Hosein), Abd-el-Aziz, at the head of 12,000 men, attacked the town in which it stood, destroyed the mosque and the tomb, and without the loss of one man slew 3,000 pilgrims, and carried off treasures so immense as to require 2,000 camels to carry them.

Next followed, in 1803, the conquest of Mecca, Medina, and Jeddah, and the establishment of Sa'ud's authority throughout Arabia, excepting only Hadrahmaut and Oman, where he found a formidable enemy in the Imam of Muscat.

About this time the Persian Gulf was much infested by Arab pirates, the Joasmis, a Wahabi tribe, who dwelt on the coast westwards of Cape Musendom. They had hitherto avoided attacking British vessels, but, at length, began to assail them also. The British now thought it time to interfere, and an English force was despatched in 1809 under Captain Wainwright, commander of the squadron, and Colonel (afterwards General) Lionel Smith, both of whom acted in concert with the Prince of Muscat. The result was the pirate fleet was dispersed, their principal town, Ras-el-Khaima, was taken, a great number of warehouses filled with goods burnt, and all their fortifications destroyed. Successful, however, as was this expedition, it became necessary under the government of the Marquis of Hastings to send another against Khaima. It is reported that upon both these occasions the pirates received considerable assistance from the French Government, via the Isle of France, the object being to create a French interest in Arabia which might subserve their pretensions in India.

The campaign of the Pasha of Egypt against the Wahabis in 1813 had been, his army having suffered a considerable loss at Jeddah, the port of Mecca; but he redoubled his exertions, and, having organised fresh troops, he, early in the spring of 1813, brought the contest to a triumphant conclusion. The Wahabis were driven from the coast; Mecca, Medina, and Jeddah were all retaken, and restored to the authority of the Porte, and to the worship of the true believers. Mohammed Ali, the Turkish general, sent his youngest son, Ismail Pasha, to Constantinople, to lay the keys of Mecca at the feet of the Sultan.

In 1814 Sa'ud died, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Abdallah. The death of Sa'ud was the forerunner of the ruin of the Wahabis, for in 1815 the Egyptians obtained a signal victory over them at Bissel, &c. Tusun Bey, on that occasion, paid six dollars for every head of a Wahabi; and, having by this means collected not less than 6,000, he ordered them to be piled up in a pyramid, round which he and his victorious troops marched in triumph.

Thus the power of the Wahabis was, it is true, seriously shattered, but they were not exterminated, inasmuch as in 1827 they caused considerable trouble to Mahomed Ali, for the scattered bands still maintained a roving independence in the desert; and one troop, commanded by the heroic daughter of Abd-el-Wahab, more than once met the Turkish forces in the field. There appears, however, but little probability that their power, once so formidable, will ever be reconsolidated. But whether it be so or not, certain it is that the principles of the sect are being industriously, but secretly, propagated in India, and that the number of converts is very great.—I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

THE KUKA EXECUTION.

The Englishman, without pronouncing any decisive judgment on the subject, would deprecate the hasty censure which the Kuka execution has elicited from some of its contemporaries. Severe and terrible as was the retribution, we are not inclined to think that it exceeded what the circumstances demanded. It would be a very sanguinary and cruel view to hold that rebellion per se invariably justifies the infliction of immediate death on those concerned in it. If the late Kuka outbreak were nothing more than a mere temporary and superficial disease of the body politic there would certainly be a marked want of proportion between its almost grotesque insignificance and the severity of the remedy adopted. But we are strongly disposed to look upon the disturbance as one of the symptoms of deep-seated and malignant mischief. The past twelve months have furnished abundant proof that a ferment of a most dangerous character was at work beneath the surface of things in the Punjab. Much more has been known to the local officials of which the public have not heard; and though the great mass of the population were still untouched, or, at all events, not so seriously affected as to make any overt display of their feelings, there was no telling how rapidly excitement might spread, should a favourable occasion present itself. The sect to which the rioters belonged is a powerful and a fanatical one; it had already shown itself ready to go to the length of popular disturbance to gain the objects of its zeal; and there is good reason to believe that its members were prepared to co-operate generally with the late rioters if successful. Under such circumstances leniency would have been weakness, and weakness would have removed the last obstacle to a much more extensive commotion. We are not surprised that the authorities should have felt that their best policy was to strike terror; and if the position was what we believe it to have been, and the guilt of the men executed is beyond doubt, we should hesitate to say that in the means adopted for that end they have exceeded what the circumstances required.

The Friend of India holds that it is want of nerve that leads to executions of this kind. The man of nerve prefers to face a danger rather than recklessly throw away one human life. The man whose nerve is deficient is the man always readiest to strike a fallen foe on the least suspicion of danger. At all events, as we were not with the Englishman in its attack upon brave soldiers for carrying out a simple rule of legitimate warfare, so neither are we in favour of the monstrous shooting down of unarmed prisoners after a miserable fanatical outbreak. If Mr. Cowan was not present at the execution the Government ought to contradict the rumour at once. If he was—and we fear there is no doubt that he was—we are quite satisfied that he has done a deed that will be historical, and that will lead to such an inquiry as will place the power of British officers upon a new basis. The responsibility accepted by the heroes of the great mutiny has immortalised their names; but responsibility is accepted under penalties, and if a man makes a mistake he must answer for it wherever human life is concerned. We do not believe that such acts are necessary to the perpetuation of our sway in India. Nay, we believe that they are more dangerous to it than almost anything else we can do. For if we cannot show that under our rule life is more precious and justice more certain we have very little to place us above the worst conquerors that India ever had. Executive power and ability will not compensate for a departure from the rules of justice and moderation which it is the pride of all good governments to make the foundation-stone of their rule. The Indian Government will at its peril fail to make a full and searching inquiry into this military execution. The grain we destroy we can restore at a little money cost; the life we destroy we cannot restore. There is the difference, and a perception of that difference is one of the lines between civilisation and barbarism; and the more certainly we are on the one side or the other the more certainly are we on the side of barbarism or of civilisation.

CONVERSION OF CASTE YOUTHS.

The Madras Times is willing to acknowledge the zeal of the missionaries in their work of converting the heathen and the perseverance that they show; but at the same time we cannot help thinking that they often show "zeal without knowledge." They show too much anxiety about the conversion of it, may be, a single individual. If one is brought to acknowledge Christianity they think that a greater work has been done than if thousands had been brought under the influence of Christianity, and whose lives may have been made better by knowing what it is. Missionaries are doing a good work in their schools, even if they do not make a single convert. They teach the youths who come under their instruction what is good, and try to instil proper principles in their minds. They clear away many of the prejudices that have been contracted and which have come down to them from their ancestors. With regard to religion every young man who goes through a regular course in a Mission School must be, more or less, in favour of Christianity, though he may not be willing openly to acknowledge it. He knows exactly what Christianity is, and is able to correct the erroneous opinions of his fellow-countrymen. A young man of this description must carry some influence with him, we should fancy, in favour of the religion of his teachers. Mission schools are preparing the soil for the growth of Christianity. They are clearing away the weeds, so that in the future the plant may grow up abundantly. It is too early yet to think of gathering in the harvest. The season of preparation is still going on, and why try to force the crop? Let us look for a moment at the effect that a conversion produces in a place like Ellore or Bezwadah. As soon as it becomes known that a youth has made up his mind to become a Christian, and has taken refuge in the house of a missionary, there is a tremendous outcry. The police have to be called in to preserve order, and at Ellore an extra force had to be called in to preserve peace. This is not a state of things that we like to see with regard to a religion of peace. The less noise and confusion there is about the matter, the better will be the feeling in favour of the religion that is preached. Then the friends of the youth who has expressed his intention of becoming a Christian come to see him, and try to bring him back, and if he remains obdurate, there is an appeal to the civil authorities. Sixteen is the age fixed at which a youth can choose for himself, so the friends always try to prove that the convert is under that age. If they succeed in this the youth has to go with them whether he likes it or not; but if it is proved that he is above that age, he is allowed to go where he likes. If he still adheres to his determination, his friends make a last appeal, and then invoke all sorts of curses on his head, and leave him. This is not a very pleasant state of things to contemplate, and if conversions could be carried out in a quieter way it would be much better. Then the effect upon the school is that all the Hindu boys leave it, and very few ever return. Thus, a flourishing school may be broken up in a single day, and it may happen that it may never be established again. The question may be asked whether in order to gain one youth it is worth while to lose the influence over hundreds. We must in such a case set one against hundreds, and hundreds are turned adrift in order that one may be kept. Then the youth has to be kept in a mission-house apart from his friends, and this we consider one of the worst features of the present system of converting young Hindus. The convert is treated as an exotic. His habits are altogether changed, and he grows up neither a Hindu nor anything else. He may learn to eat with a fork and a spoon, and to dress in a style half English and half native, but this will not make him a better man, or make his friends more inclined to look with greater favour upon Christianity.

THE BHAMO ROUTE TO CHINA.

The Bombay Gazette holds that direct access from India to the western provinces of China has become a political and commercial necessity for England. The trade with China is the most valuable that any country can possess, and the monopoly of it which England has enjoyed since the rise of the East India Company to greatness is now seriously threatened. America is already competing with us in the Pacific; and it is obvious that the commerce of San Francisco with Japan and China must grow rapidly every year, till all the new world gets its supplies of tea and silk by this route. By land, again, the Russians are steadily making approaches towards the western frontier of China. By last mail we learnt that orders have been already given for the survey of a line of railway from Orenburg on to Kuldja, the capital of the new province of Dzungaria, conquered last year; and, as Russia has taken up heartily Mr. Fairlie's narrow gauge scheme, she can lay down lines cheaply and rapidly through thinly populated districts which yield no traffic to pay broad-gauge lines. The great northern caravan route from China westwards bifurcates beyond the desert of Gobi, at a place called Kamul whence one road runs to the north of the Thian-Shan range of mountains through Dzungaria to Nijni-novgorod, and the other south of the mountains to Kashgur and Yarkand. The Russians have been advancing eastwards along the former road, and the Yarkandis along the latter, drawing nearer and nearer to one another as they moved towards the point where the roads unite; and as the Atalik Ghasi has possessed himself of Turfan, which is not far from Kamul, he must soon come into collision with the Russian generals, who will certainly not rest till they have secured the mastery of this route, by which they can penetrate into the heart of China. The result of the collision is, of course, not doubtful; and probably the Envoy from Yarkand, now on his way to Calcutta, is charged with the duty of explaining that the Russians will soon hold all except the southern lines of communication between Eastern Turkistan and China, and will have the still independent kingdom of Yarkand entirely at their mercy unless England intervene. We should certainly do well to recognise Yacoub Bey as our ally, and to show more political and commercial activity in Eastern Turkistan and Thibet, so as to keep the Russians at a distance; but, obviously, Russia has already got a good start, and we are now exposed to the double danger of having much of the China trade drawn away overland by Russia, while America carries off another goodly portion by sea. There is nothing fanciful in the opinion that this is a very serious matter for a commercial country like England, whose wealth depends in great part on her good fortune in being the entrepôt from which America and Europe at present draw their supplies of the produce of China.

THE BURDWAN FEVER.

The Friend of India has heard it said, but hopes untruly, that there is still a disposition in high quarters to search for the way not to do it, to deal too lightly with the overpowering weight of positive evidence which goes to show that the districts of Hooghly and Burdwan have slowly passed into the sanitary condition of a primitive swamp, and to temporise by adducing against this argument some little local facts which are unexplained by the great physical change observed. It is said for instance that the fever has crossed the Damoodah at certain points, and that its prevalence in Nuddea cannot be accounted for by the state of the soil at Burdwan. Evidence is rarely perfect we know, but it is surely not permissible, by any process of reasoning, to set such mere suspicions of its incompleteness here against the mass of positive proof. Moreover there is every reason to believe that these localities have a similar state of soil, though it has not been brought about precisely in the same manner. In the districts east of the Hooghly the obstructing effect of the Eastern Bengal Railway has been demonstrated, and though the land west of the Damoodah may not have suffered from the river embankment itself, it has suffered, beyond doubt, from the general causes of obstruction to which the embankment is but an addition. Had it been possible in England to contend against such a mass of positive evidence as is now before the Government of Bengal on this subject, its hot-beds of miasm would have remained to the present time undrained and deadly.

DIFFICULTIES OF CENSUS-TAKING.—We hear that the attempt to take the census in the Noakhali District has resulted in a serious disturbance, which, if the accounts that have reached us be true, may yet lead to further trouble. The inhabitants of Sonadeah and the surrounding villages are said to have assembled in large numbers, many of them armed with guns, and driven the census-officers out of the pargana. The Assistant Superintendent of Police and a few constables proceeded to the spot, but were assaulted and wounded. They were followed by a magistrate and the superintendent with a score of armed constables, who were still unable to disperse the mob. Our correspondent represents Wahabi (Ferazi) influences as being at the bottom of the disturbance.—Englishman.

BILL FOR PRESERVING ELEPHANTS.—At the meeting of the Legislative Council on Jan. 19, the Hon. R. S. Ellis, C.B., moved for leave to introduce a Bill to prevent the indiscriminate destruction of elephants. In doing so, he said that he was obliged to ask leave to introduce this Bill on account of the considerable demand made for elephants for the public service. The cause of destruction of male and female elephants in the Madras Presidency, he said, was owing to the indiscriminate destruction of the beasts by sportsmen, the extension of railway increasing population, and the extension of roads for public purposes. To prevent these animals from being wantonly destroyed it was necessary to prohibit entirely the destruction of female elephants in Government lands and other places except in waste lands. He would also propose that male elephants should not be destroyed in Government lands except in such cases when a party has a license from the Collector of the District to shoot them. He also said that permission should be granted to collectors to issue licenses, and that without their permission no person should be allowed to shoot male elephants. Considering the great demand for elephants, the hon. speaker hoped that permission would be given him to introduce a Bill to prevent their indiscriminate destruction. Permission was accordingly granted.

ANOTHER WOULD-BE ASSASSIN.—We hear from Muttra of rather a sensational event for that usually peaceful district, nothing less than a murderous assault upon a magistrate while seated in open court. On the afternoon of the 21st inst. a Hindu fanatic wanted to visit one of the temples in the city, but was turned back by the armed attendant at the gate, who told him that the god was asleep, and there was no admittance. He went away in high dudgeon, and that same evening, when there was a crowd on the spot to witness the arrival of a procession, and the guard who had repulsed him was loading his gun to fire a salute, the ruffian stole behind, and snatching the sword from his belt, swung it round, intending, as he afterwards stated, to kill the man who had insulted him, and any two or three more, and then die fighting like a hero. He was captured by the police, and on the 24th brought up before the assistant magistrate, who was then out in the district in camp. The prisoner was placed at the door of the tent, without handcuffs; but between two constables; and the sword, the corpus delicti, was produced and laid on the table at which the magistrate was writing. Only a few words of the first witness's deposition had been recorded, when the prisoner made a rush forward, and getting possession of the sword, with one hand drew off the sheath, and with the other aimed a violent blow at the magistrate's head. Fortunately, the tent was so small as to prevent free action of the arm, and the only injury sustained was a blow from the flat of the sword on the back of the neck. The only other person actually inside the tent was the Peshkar, a strong burly man, by name Braj Mohan Lall, who, falling upon the assassin, pinned him up in the corner, and with the help of the police and the crowd of servants and chuprassis, whom the cries of Sahib ko mardana brought at once to the spot, succeeded in overpowering him, and forcing the sword from his grasp, but not before several persons, and especially the Munshi, had been severely cut about the hands. The man represents himself as a native of Sindh, and apparently is desirous of meeting his death in the holy land of Braj—a privilege which, it is to be hoped, will be denied him.—Pioneer, Jan. 29.

THE DELHI MANŒUVRES.

Jan. 27.—Instead of returning to-day to our old encamping grounds, as every one had expected and hoped, the troops are to be detained here till Tuesday morning; and for what, do you suppose? In order that the soldiers may have games on Monday! Whether the idea really originated in a kindly feeling towards the men, under the impression that they would like to remain out here three days longer, with no changes of clothes and all the discomfort of close packing in order that about one man in every hundred might see who could run the faster, or jump the highest; or whether, in fact, it was thought politic, and would look well, that the troops should be kept out as late in the month as possible, so that the world might suppose all that time the troops had been learning lessons in the art of war—it is impossible to say. Monday and Tuesday were fatiguing days. The troops at Gurgaon having been up at 1 A.M., were marching till 4 P.M.; one half advanced nearly as far as Humayoon's Tomb, with the object of cutting off General Tombs' retreat to Okla, and very nearly succeeded in doing so; in fact they compelled him to make a very undignified retreat to high ground; the other part of the Gurgaon force stopped near Muhsudpur for the night. The former could not have gone over less than twenty miles of ground, without any countermarching. The surgeon of the regiment officially reported his men could not march another hundred yards; but this report is perhaps to be attributed to other causes. The men were very much done up that day, there is no doubt of it. Next day, Tuesday, General Tombs made good his retreat to the Jumna, having sent off his heavy baggage in very good time, so that in fact he had nothing left to do but keep a sharp look-out for General McMurdo's troops, and gracefully retire before them. The idea of preventing General McMurdo from relieving Tughlukabad seems to have been abandoned. There appears to have been no attempt at generalship on either side, and, like all cut-and-dried operations, it was excessively stupid and unprofitable. Indeed beyond entailing an immense amount of bodily fatigue on all concerned, a good many days spent at the Camp of Exercise might be put in the same category. The troops find themselves moving here and there, suddenly halted, suddenly advanced again, then all at once retiring, but they don't understand what is going on; no explanation of the day's proceedings is ever given to the officers when it is all over—the mistakes are not pointed out, and, with the exception of the Brigadiers, few have learnt anything. One idea certainly the British soldier has acquired, that the puff of a gun a mile off means utter destruction, and that his regiment may consider itself defunct from that moment, and unfit for anything more. Everyone has been expecting to be taught something by their commanders, and the proceedings of the preceding day explained with its good and bad points demonstrated, while occurrences were fresh in the memory. But very probably, when the whole thing is over, certain general defects will be pointed out, but this will not have the effect that an immediate correction of errors and explanation of operations would have had. Scindia, it is said, has already sent orders to Gwalior to prepare for a camp of exercise; so that we are teaching our allies as well as ourselves the art of war. The King of Siam arrived here yesterday; he went about the camp on an elephant. To-day the whole of the troops parade under the personal command of Lord Napier, who is to show them how to attack a force, which is to be represented by skeleton troops; after which there will be a march-past by brigades for the benefit of his Majesty of Siam. A notice is stuck up on the Kootub; it is dated 22nd January, 1 P.M., and signed by an officer of Engineers. "This building destroyed and signallers annihilated, three-quarters of an hour allowed to restore it and replace signallers." Of course this was the act of one of General McMurdo's side who caught General Tombs' signallers at the top of the Kootub.

Jan. 28.—Wiser counsels have prevailed, and late in the evening yesterday the order for the march of all the troops this morning to their old standing camps came out. It did appear to show a want of consideration for both officers and men to continue so unnecessarily their discomfort here. The head-quarter people quite forgot that we poor folks pitched on swampy ground, with no means of tubbing, with no more clean clothes to put on our backs, and very few of us with anything but mother earth for our couch. I say these good people did not take it into the account that we have no nice big tents pitched amid the groves around the Kootub, where we can daily, or even nightly, repair for our domestic comforts. Yesterday the greater part of the troops were formed into an attacking force against a skeleton enemy, who retired before us over the hills and rocks. This went on till about 1 P.M., when the "cease firing" was sounded, and the troops were formed into columns near the village of Muhsudpur, and after an hour's rest, marched past—artillery, cavalry, and infantry. Beside the Commander-in-Chief, on a sorry looking tat was a Eurasian looking youth, in undress apparel (as he had apparently forgotten to put on his pants), and a very seedy felt-hat perceptibly battered in on one side. This nondescript party, who from his get-up certainly seemed to have no business there, we were told was the King of Siam. Behind the Chief was a row of handsomely caparisoned elephants, and seated in the howdahs, with their small yellow faces surmounted with black jockey caps just visible and apparently gorging buns and cakes, were a number of diminutive yellow creatures, apparently a school out for a holiday. These, we learnt, were the younger brothers and Ministers of State of the King of Siam. Heaven save the mark! The sooner there is a republic in that country and such royalty put aside the better. But this is perhaps rather hard. The youth on his pony may be a very good fellow after all; though it is shocking to think he has sixteen wives and is only eighteen years of age. Those who saw it say the march-past was splendid; the troops appeared to move with an elastic and yet firm step, their legs being in much better condition since they came to the camp. Every one expected that the Chief would take the last opportunity of the whole of his gallant army being together to say a few words to the General and Brigadiers before dismissing them. But we simply marched on after saluting straight to our tents, heartily glad to think this was the last of it. Great was the rejoicing when the order to march next morning to our old camps and our big tents, to our tubs, to our clean clothes, to our tables and chairs and beds—and, in fact, to civilised life. Some people think that if the head-quarter folks had not had their nice cosy tents pitched a mile off from their other ones they too would have been as sick of it as we are.

FIRST DIVISION, DELHI, Jan. 29.—We had expected not to have been back to Delhi before to-morrow, as the games had been arranged to take place to-day at the Kootub; but the men having nothing but marching kit with them, found they could not perform their feats satisfactorily, and therefore begged to be allowed to come in yesterday. Lord Napier kindly allowed us to do so, so we marched early yesterday morning, returning to our standing camp in the old Cantonnments; the 2nd and 3rd Divisions have gone to Naraina and Madhipore respectively. The assault-of-arms has been postponed till to-morrow, and the day after we are to have some skyraces.—Pioneer Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

MILITARY.—We hear that Captain Grant, R.A., one of the Aides-de-camp of the Governor-General, has been appointed to the Quartermaster-General's Department.

COLONEL FRASER.—Colonel Fraser, v.c., 11th Hussars, has, to the great joy of his brother officers at the Delhi Camp, with whom he is a great favourite, quite recovered from his recent illness, and is attached to the headquarter staff for special duty.

GENERAL OLPHERTS.—Brigadier-General Olpherts, c.b., v.c., whose accident our readers have been informed, is in Delhi, at the house of the Commissioner. His thigh was fractured a little above the knee. The bone has been reset, and the General is doing well, although he is in great pain.

CHOLERA.—We regret to hear that cholera is raging with great virulence in Chuckerbaria, Bhowanipore, and in the suburbs of Calcutta. The mortality seems to be rather great. It is said three or four persons are daily carried off. The people attribute the disease to the sudden change in the weather.—Englishman, Jan. 30.

PUBLIC WORKS.—We regret to learn that Colonel Trevor, R.E., has been obliged by ill-health to resign his appointment of Under-Secretary to the Government of India in the Public Works Department. Colonel Trevor leaves Calcutta this week on his way home by Bombay.

GWALIOR.—On the arrival of the King of Siam at the Camp of Delhi, the Maharajah Sindia left abruptly, because, it is said, attentions were paid the King which were not paid to him. However, it is likely that the news of a conspiracy in his territory was the real reason for the sudden departure of Sindia. When he reached Gwalior, his capital, he at once took repressive steps, and banished many of the conspirators.

PUNJAB.—Col. Mercer succeeds Major Birch as Deputy Commissioner of Jullundhur, who goes on furlough to Europe. Mr. J. W. Smyth, who has arrived from England, will revert to the Deputy Commissionership of Lahore. Mr. Melville, Financial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, proceeds to Jullundhur to relieve Major Paske as Commissioner, who is acting for Mr. Brandreth. Major Davis, Commissioner of Jullundhur, goes home on furlough.

BENARES, Jan. 27.—A Brahmin of Sattara has lately come to Benares who has a really wonderful memory. He can work out mentally hard sums in cube and square roots in less time than others take to do them with slate and pencil. Last evening he came over to Queen's College and saw the principal. We were amused for some time with his wonderful performances. Three or four hard sums were given to him, which he could work out in his mind simultaneously, all the while talking and being talked to, and disturbed in a variety of ways. The principal was highly pleased with him. He has received many certificates, and one gentleman testifies to this his wonderful gift of memory by saying that "one can regard him only as a natural phenomenon."—Pioneer, Jan. 29.

FINANCIAL.—A contemporary announces that Mr. E. Gay, Deputy Controller of Accounts in the Financial Department, has been selected to proceed to England to assist Mr. Harrison in the preparation of the accounts for the Finance Committee in the place of Babu Shamacharn De.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE.—More than one of our correspondents from the Delhi Camp have commented on the supposed partizanship of an umpire in the mock action of the 19th, who was alleged to have confined his award to crying—"We've won, we've won." A letter from Colonel O. Wilkinson, in another column, clears up the misapprehension. Colonel Wilkinson was the umpire in question; and what he said on the occasion referred to was not "We've won, we've won," but "Its even, its even;" and certainly the resemblance of sound is sufficient to explain the mistaken impression on the part of hearers at some distance.—Pioneer.

OPIUM.—In an article on opium, in the last Indian Medical Gazette, Surgeon Moore ably defends the Government of India against the charge of encouraging immorality by its trade in that drug, upon purely physiological grounds. His conclusions are that the use of opium is not more injurious than that of spirits, that in moderation it is harmless, and that the temptation to excess is no greater in the one case than in the other. When food is not available, and in malarious situations, he considers its use actually beneficial, and he maintains that opium-craving is, contrary to the usual opinion, as easy to conquer as dipsomania.

THE FURLOUGH BLOCK.—We understand that leave to England is being refused to field officers on the plea that there are no more furloughs available. This means that the percentage of absentees in the rank of field officer has been reached, and may not, save on sick leave, be exceeded. Looking to the number of unemployed officers in receipt of Indian pay, it may appear remarkable that their services are not utilised. This simple expedient would at once render easy the working of the furlough regulations of 1868 now threatened by this new complication, and effect a considerable saving. A furlough dead lock out at this early date cannot but conduce to a break-down and practical return to the old rules within the next ten years. To tell an officer of long service that he is entitled to a furlough which cannot be granted to him for the next five years, such is the number of applicants for leave, is to condemn him to sick furlough. And sick leave will still further intensify the difficulty by gradually substituting itself for the ordinary furlough contemplated in the regulations of 1868.—Indian Daily News.

CABUL.—A correspondent from Cabul writes that a kafilah was proceeding from Candahar to Shakurpur. When it reached the precincts of Bohlun, two tribes, the Beloochies and Murries, assaulted and looted the caravan. They plundered 500 laden camels and 300 asses. The property plundered amounted to about 10 lacs. The kafilah confronted the assailants; about seventy men on both sides were killed. The communication is stopped, and the Amir has taken steps to open the road as soon as possible, and to punish the turbulent tribes. The forty field-pieces that were brought back from Herat have been ordered to be broken down, and cannons on the English principle are to be made of them. The Amir highly approves of English guns, and desires to introduce similar arms in his kingdom. The Amir also ordered to be repaired all the arms which were discovered in the houses of Sirdar Mohamad Uslu Khan and Mohamad Hussain Khan. Mahomed Alum Khan, who was appointed Nazim of Turkestan, is said to have fled towards Kholab. Numerous complaints have been made against him from the province, and the Amir was reported to be making arrangements for his recall. On hearing this, Mahomed Alum Khan left Kholab and fled towards Kholab.—Punjab Times, Jan. 26.

LITERARY.—The third number of a series of notices of Sanskrit MSS. by Rajendralala Mitra has been published by order of the Government of Bengal. This is a work now being undertaken all over India, and its value is in the fact that the papers give the names of the works, the age of the MSS. and the places where deposited. It is one of those quiet unostentatious works, which, without attracting the attention of the present time, will do a great deal to assist the future historian, and throw light upon the old and deeply interesting literature of India.—Our Lahore contemporary hears that there is a chance of Dr. Trumpp, the translator of the Adi-Granth, returning to Europe almost immediately, in order to elaborate there his great contribution to Sikh literature. It is to be regretted that his extensive knowledge of languages, especially of Pushtu, should not have been turned to account by the Government, by retaining him in the Punjab. Government, as our contemporary remarks, does not seem to care for specialists. Were it otherwise, Dr. Haug would still be working among the Parsees, instead of giving the benefit of his learning to the University of Munich.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Feb. 2.—A fair demand has been experienced during the past week, and a considerable quantity of goods and yarns has changed hands at, in most cases, hardening rates.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Feb. 2.—Jute: Prices have still an upward tendency, and the market rules very firm, the crop being gradually exhausted. Saltpetre: There has been a fair business done, and a slight rise in rates has taken place. Linseed: A considerable rise has taken place, the supplies up-country being nearly exhausted. Raw Silk: About 23 bales of native Junipore and Cosmoazur November bund have changed hands at Rs. 18 and 17 respectively, but there is no other business reported; the arrivals continue on a small scale only, and holders are firm. Corahs: Some 5,000 pieces have changed hands at a considerable reduction on former demands, Rs. 155 to 160 being the highest rates for the best qualities.

GANJAM.—The distress in the Ganjam district, we are happy to say, is still lessening. The measures adopted by the Government to counteract the effects of the drought and famine have been very successful, and have, no doubt, contributed much to arrest that severity of the calamity which was at one time anticipated. Relief works, consisting of road-making and repairing, sinking wells, digging canals, making advances to salt cultivators, &c., have been taken in hand in good time, and have had the best effect in greatly lessening, if not in altogether removing, the hardships and privations which the people would otherwise undoubtedly have felt.—Madras Athenaeum.

PUBLIC WORKS.—We are sorry to read the death of Mr. W. B. Trail, of the Mysore D. P. W. He joined the department as assistant engineer from the Railway Department, and was a hardworking officer. He left India in November last, in a very sick state, but was unable to proceed further than Cairo, where he died.—Bangalore Spectator, Jan. 29.

INCOME-TAX.—As the time for the appearance of the financial budget approaches the fears that the income-tax will not be relinquished become more and more general and confirmed. A belief is, however, prevalent that the tax, if continued, will be levied at a lower rate; but this concession, if made, will not satisfy the people. Nothing, indeed, short of doing away with the impost altogether will be satisfactory or restore the harassed taxpayers to good humour.—Madras Athenæum.

SNAKES.—Dr. Shortt, in answer to a request from Government, sends a list of poisonous snakes to be found in the Madras Presidency. He says that these snakes are to be met with in the most densely inhabited parts of this town. We are told that snakes lay from eleven to fifteen eggs, all perfect, and it is thought that on the average six out of every snake brood attain some size. Dr. Shortt thinks that one rupee ought to be offered for every snake that is killed, and he thinks that if this were done men would make it their business to search out and kill snakes, while now those only are brought in that are killed by accident. Dr. Shortt says that large rewards are offered for the destruction of wild beasts, and yet the number of deaths caused by them is not so numerous as those caused by snakes. Dr. Shortt says he would like to try experiments in the Madras and Tanjore collectorates with regard to snake-killing. The Government does not think such a large reward as one rupee is required, but propose that two annas should be given for every poisonous snake that is killed, and that the experiment should be tried in the districts pointed out by Dr. Shortt.—Madras Times, Jan. 26.

MILITARY.—We are sorry to hear from Secunderabad that the 16th Lancers do not much appreciate the change of stations. Surely this gallant regiment could not have expected to pass the whole of their Indian career at such a delightful station as Bangalore, or have forgotten that in the natural course of events they must undergo the same vicissitudes of an Indian career as others who have not had the good fortune to spend their first six years here. We regret to hear very bad accounts of the health of the 3-60th Rifles, which corps it will be remembered left Bellary for Aden some time since. We hesitate to publish all that we hear, but there can be no doubt whatever that the mortality in the corps since it arrived at the latter place has been excessive.—Bangalore Herald, Jan. 30.—We are happy to announce the arrival at Rangoon of the right wing and head-quarters of the gallant 45th Regiment on its way to Thayetmyo. This wing will remain here, we understand, until the arrival of his Excellency the Viceroy, after which they will proceed up to Thayetmyo. The whole regiment is likely to be detained at Rangoon until the ceremony connected with the Governor-General's visit to Burmah has terminated.—Rangoon Times, Jan. 19.—The left wing 1st Regiment Madras N.I., en route from Kamptee to Madras, will arrive here by train at 9 P.M. to-day, and leave Poona by 3 P.M. train to-morrow.—Deccan Herald, Jan. 29.

AN OLD MUTINEER TURNING UP AGAIN.—We understand that a serious misunderstanding took place between a detachment of sepoy of the 39th M.N.I., we believe, on their way to Ooscottah to relieve a detachment at that depot, and a crowd of natives, on the 18th inst. It would appear that when the sepoys stopped at the Attapilly Chattrum, they found a Brahmin, who on their approach called them a pack of cowards, or words to that effect, and ordered them not to stop in the place. Of course the detachment paid no attention to what they heard, but piled arms, posted a sentry, and proceeded to make themselves comfortable. Some persons approaching a little while after, the sentry quietly warned them to keep off. The Brahmin then came up again and angrily said, "Why am I to keep off? Do you know who I am? In 1858, I cut many a man like you sepoy (meaning soldiers) into pieces, and now I'll do the same for you." On this he went into his room and came out with a sword, and before the order of the Havildar to the guard to fall in could be obeyed, the fanatic made a cut at the sentry, which the latter dodged, and the blow fell upon another man, and wounded him on the side, cutting through his coat. The guard then went at him, but he threw down his sword, and he was secured with two other men who had swords but did not draw. All three were thus taken and made over to the police, and the case is now undergoing strict investigation. The above is, we have reason to believe, a perfectly correct account of what happened on the occasion, and we give it as simply another straw to show which way the wind blows. On the whole we do not think it needs even Lord Napier of Magdala's word to assure the world that a deep-seated and ever increasing antipathy to the British power exists throughout the whole country, and who knows but that ere long the gallant and ever loyal Madras Army will have again hot work on its hands.—Bangalore Herald, Jan. 25.

EXPORT OF FLOUR TO INDIA.—In exercise of the power conferred by section 6 of the Indian Tariff Act, 1871, the Governor-general in Council is pleased to fix Rs. 15 per barrel or sack of 200 lbs. as the value, for the purposes of the said Act, of flour imported by sea into British India.

THE BANK OF BOMBAY IN LIQUIDATION.

An extraordinary general meeting of the proprietors of the above Bank was held at the offices of the New Bank of Bombay, Limited, in Elphinstone Circle, on Monday, the 29th January. There were about a dozen gentlemen present. Mr. N. Spencer, sen., who was voted to the chair, said the first thing necessary would be to dispose of the items left undisposed of at the last meeting.

Mr. W. Rodgie then read the following report:—

"At the meeting held here on the 2nd ultimo to consider the scheme for forthwith completing the liquidation of the Bank, of which notice was given on 29th July last, a resolution was proposed and seconded, that in the opinion of the meeting proceedings should be adopted by the liquidator against the directors of the Bank, to compel them to make good all losses sustained through loans of an unauthorised nature. The meeting was, however, adjourned for fourteen days, until the 16th ultimo, on which day it was again adjourned until 29th January next, of which you will receive due notice herewith.

"Immediately after the meeting of 2nd ult. my solicitors prepared a case for the opinion of two counsel in Bombay, as to the liability of the directors, which was first submitted to one of the leading shareholders here, who prepared additional notes of argument, which were annexed to the case. The opinions which were not received until early in the present month differed on the main points of the case, but agreed that the Act of Limitations applied to the claim, and that the limitation would be six years, which would restrict the enquiry and claim to the end-of-the-year 1865, and one counsel doubted whether the liquidator was the proper person to institute such a suit. Copies of the case and opinions may be seen at the offices of Messrs. Rimington, Hore, and Langley, Bombay, or of Mr. E. M. Hore, 52, Lincoln's inn-fields, London.

"I thereupon convened a meeting of the shareholders in Bombay, to advise with me in the matter, which meeting was held on the 15th instant, and adjourned until the 17th instant, when, after long deliberation by the shareholders present (very few in number), a resolution was carried, requesting me to refrain from taking any proceedings previous to the meeting of 29th January next. Notwithstanding the resolution passed at this meeting, I have informed those shareholders who desired that immediate action should be taken, that if they were prepared to indemnify me for costs up to 29th January next, I would at once file a short plaint in the High Court here, and thus prevent the Act of Limitations from taking further prejudicial effect.

"My solicitors have sent instructions to London for a further case to be submitted to eminent counsel there, particulars of which, and the opinion to be obtained thereon, may be seen at the office of Mr. Hore, 52, Lincoln's-inn-fields.

"The liquidation of the Bank, so far as relates to the collection of assets, was practically closed in September last, and it is therefore necessary, if the liquidation is further to be delayed, that some new arrangement should be made for the remuneration of the liquidator.

"Should the shareholders at the meeting of 29th January next decide by a majority to adopt legal measures against any of the directors, the result of any suit or suits which may be instituted by the liquidator on such request would appear to be uncertain, the enquiry a very wide one, and the proceedings very lengthy, difficult, and costly. I am therefore advised by counsel, other than those whose opinions are before referred to, that before adopting any such proceedings, a proper indemnity should be furnished to me, or an order obtained for the liquidation of the Bank being continued under the High Court, so that the sanction of the Court might be obtained for the proceedings, and the question as to the right of the shareholders to divide the money held by the liquidator against liabilities unadjusted, and supposed to be barred, decided, and also that in the event of the suits proving unsuccessful, and the remaining assets proving insufficient, to defray the costs thereof a portion of the money already returned to the shareholders may be made available to satisfy such deficiency. "WILLIAM RODGIE."

The Chairman said he did not see why they were obliged to take up the several items on the list of business in the order they were placed. He thought they had better first decide as to the propriety of adopting legal proceedings or otherwise. As all other questions hinged on that, it would be better to discuss that point first. He believed Mr. Rodgie had received a great number of letters from gentlemen, with a request that they should be read at the meeting.

Mr. Macdonald (of Sir Charles Forbes and Co.), after some discussion, proposed and Dr. Martin seconded:—"That it is inexpedient to adopt legal proceedings against the late directors of the bank with the object of recovering from them the sums alleged to have been lost by their misconduct and negligence in the management of the affairs of the bank, and that the liquidators be directed to discontinue any such proceedings which may have been instituted."

The proposition was carried.

Some further discussion having ensued regarding the adjournment,

Mr. Macdonald proposed that this meeting be adjourned till Thursday, February the 8th, at 3 P.M., for the consideration and disposal of the rest of the business before the meeting.

The motion was seconded by Dr. Martin, and carried unanimously.

The meeting then separated.

Miscellaneous.

STATE RAILWAYS.—The Government of India has accepted the tender of Messrs. Glover and Co., of Bombay, on a schedule of rates for the construction and maintenance for two years of the section from Agra to Sambhur of the Rajpootana State Railway.

RAID ON A CARAVAN.—News has come to hand that a caravan travelling from Candahar to Shikarpoor has been attacked by Beloochees and Murries, and property to the value of ten lakhs (£100,000) looted. About seventy men were killed in the struggle on both sides. The Ameer has taken steps in the matter.—Times of India.

A NEW RETIREMENT SCHEME.—We have reason to believe that, notwithstanding the forbidding tone which must have been traced in the various despatches from the Secretary of State in the military reduction question, the Government of India have resolved again to press on the Home Government the necessity of averting future financial difficulties by acceding to some retirement schemes sufficiently attractive and liberal to draw off the surplus of field officers.—Times of India.

MUSCAT.—On the 7th Jan. intelligence reached Muscat that Ibrahim bin Kais was again in the vicinity of Khabooreh with only a handful of followers, attempting to obtain possession of the fort by intriguing with the tribe of El Howasineh. The latter were united in opposing Ibrahim, who was forced to return once more to Sohar. A number of the Beni-boo Husan tribe arrived in Muscat to visit his Highness. This morning salutes were fired from the forts of Muscat in honour of the anniversary of His Highness Syed Torkee's accession to power. Some showers of rain have fallen.

INVESTITURE OF THE RAO OF CUTCH.—At the investiture of the Rao of Cutch with the order of G.C.S.I. last week it was noticed as a great blot on the proceeding that no member of the Civil Service was present. Mr. Ashburner, C.S.I., and Mr. Shaw Stewart had been deputed to attend; but the former left suddenly for England and the latter could not get away from Bombay. The Government ought, in the circumstances, to have taken care that some other civilians went up to Booj; for a native Prince feels any want of care in these ceremonies as a personal slight to himself. The Rao personally is a worthy man, honest and pure in conduct, which are strange characteristics of a native Prince, but proud and a stickler for his rights and dignity. To Europeans he is always most gracious.—Bombay Gazette, Feb. 5.

ZANZIBAR.—A private letter from Zanzibar informs us that, in the beginning of December last, a report was current there that Mr. Stanley, who had started in quest of Dr. Livingstone, was dead. Mr. Stanley proceeded not merely as an explorer but as the "Commissioner" of the New York Herald. The report in Zanzibar was that two Europeans (Mr. Stanley being named as one) had died—one having been killed, and the other carried off by small-pox. Our informant, however, adds that the rumour obtained no credit in Zanzibar, as if any such misfortune had happened it is known that several of the young American's men, who were known to be staunch in their adherence to him and his enterprise, would at once have returned to Zanzibar with the news. We mention this as reports may get into circulation sooner or later calculated to cause anxiety to the traveller's friends.—Times of India.

MILITARY.—H.M.'s 3rd Regiment N.L.I., under the command of Colonel G. Scott, marched out of Mhow on the 25th ult. The destination of the regiment is Ahmedabad. Its departure from Mhow is much lamented, as the men were quiet and well behaved during their long stay at Mhow, and the officers and ladies were great favourites—taking part in everything which concerned the welfare and comfort of all at the station.—Deccan Herald. It has been decided, we read, to abolish the depot at Poona from the close of the present season. Deolalie will be thenceforward the sole depot for all troops arriving or departing overland. Taking the last three seasons, the average number of men passing through the Poona depot per season of six months has been 523. Any invalids reaching Poona whom it is undesirable on medical grounds to send on to Deolalie, will go to the Colaba Sanitarium; all others, whether invalids or time expired men, whom the journey to Deolalie will not injure, are to go to that depot. The A-18 R.A. will arrive at Poona to-day from Ahmedabad, en route to Belgaum, under the command of Capt. Newport, instead of the 28th inst.—Deccan Herald, Jan 29.

PARSEE LOYALTY.—The following notice was published on Saturday last in the native papers by the trustees of the Parsee Panchayet, in the Guzerati language:—"With the Blessings of the Almighty. Notice to the whole Parsee community. Her Majesty Queen Victoria, who rules over us, has directed her subjects in England to offer a public prayer and thanksgiving to the Almighty for the Prince's recovery, and the 20th of February is the day fixed for the occasion. Following this request the Hon. Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Bart., C.S.I., has requested the trustees of the Parsee Panchayet Fund, through a letter dated January 25th, 1872, that it is necessary that the Parsee community of Bombay as loyal subjects of her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria should assemble on the above-mentioned day for the purpose of offering thanksgiving in the fire temple of the late Mr. Hormusjee Bomanjee Wadia. In compliance with this, we the undersigned trustees of the Parsee Panchayet fund respectfully invite the whole Parsee community to attend the said temple on the 20th of February, 1872, at 9 A.M., to join in the ceremony of offering prayers to the Almighty, and thereby showing our loyalty to the Queen. Further, we respectfully request all shopkeepers and heads of Government departments to grant a holiday to their Zoroastrian employees on the above-named auspicious day to enable them to join in the ceremony and enjoy the rest of the day as a holiday.—We have, &c., BUSTONJEE JAMSETJEE JEEJEEBHAY, HEERJIBHAY HORMUSJEE SETHNA, MERWANJEE FRAMJEE PANDAY, CURSETJEE FURDOONJEE, DINSHA MANEKJEE PETIT, Trustees of the Parsee Panchayet Fund. The following regulations are published for general information under the orders of H.M.'s Secretary of State for India:—

Regulations by the Secretary of State in Council of India under the provisions of 24 and 25 Victoria, cap. 104, section 6, respecting the salaries, furloughs, retiring pensions, and (where necessary) expenses for equipment and voyage of the Chief Justices and Puisne Judges of the High Courts of Judicature for the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William, Madras, Bombay, and the North-Western Provinces; and regulations by the Secretary of State in Council respecting the furloughs and leaves of absence of certain other legal and judicial officers.

No. 1.—Salaries.

II. A Chief Justice or Acting Chief Justice of any of the High Courts of Madras, Bombay, and the North-Western Provinces, shall receive as pay Rs. 60,000 per annum, and each Puisne Judge and Acting Puisne Judge Rs. 45,000 per annum, such pay being payable only in India.

No. 2.—Furloughs and Leave of Absence.—Definitions.

I. In the following rules, "actual service" includes the period during which a Judge is carrying on his duties in a High Court, also period spent on privilege and subsidiary leave, and periods of vacation during which the Judge is not on "furlough or extraordinary leave."
"Extraordinary leave" means any leave granted otherwise than under these rules.

Furlough.

II. One year's furlough shall be placed to the credit of each Judge after the completion of every four years of actual service.

III. Except under Rules VI. and VII. no furlough shall be granted until at credit under Rule II.

Provided that any Judge who may have been already in the service of the Government at the time of taking office in the High Court, and who was at that time entitled, under the rules applicable to the branch of the service to which he belonged, to furlough, without medical certificate, may be granted furlough for a term not exceeding that to which he was so entitled upon the condition that such furlough shall not be taken until the completion of two years' actual service in the High Court, and shall not exceed one year.

IV. Except under Rule VII. furlough shall not be repeated until after the completion of three years' actual service from the date of the last return from furlough or extraordinary leave.

N.B.—The words "furlough or extraordinary leave" in the above rule mean furlough under these rules or extraordinary leave granted to an officer since he has been a Chief Justice or Judge of a High Court.

V. The maximum term of furlough to be taken at any one time shall be fifteen months.

VI. Under medical certificate, furlough may be granted before it is at credit under Rule II.

VII. On urgent private affairs, furlough may be granted before it is at credit under Rule II., and although three years of actual service have not been completed since the last return from furlough or extraordinary leave:

Provided that furlough under this section shall not exceed six months, and shall be granted only once during the whole period of a Judge's service in the High Court.

VIII. The aggregate amount of all furlough which can be granted to a Judge during the whole period of his service in the High Court shall not exceed two years and a-half.

IX. Furlough taken in India shall be reckoned from the date of the Judge quitting his office to the date of his return thereto. Furlough taken out of India shall be reckoned from the date of embarkation to the date of return.

In the event of the furlough being taken partly in India, and partly out of India, the commencement and termination of the furlough shall be respectively determined by the above rules, according as the furlough begins or ends in or out of India.

X. For the interval elapsing between the date of quitting his office and the commencement of furlough out of India, and between the termination of furlough out of India and resuming his office, a Judge may be allowed subsidiary leave not ordinarily exceeding thirty days, which in special cases may be extended.

XI. A Judge, when on furlough or subsidiary leave, shall receive allowances at the rate of Rs. 833-5-4 per mensem in the case of leave taken in India, or £1,000 per annum in the case of leave taken out of India.

XII. Except under medical certificate, the number of furloughs to be granted at any one time, and the grant of furloughs to individual Judges shall be subject to, and limited by, the exigencies of the service, which exigencies shall be determined exclusively by the authority granting the furlough.

XIII. If, owing to the exigencies of the service, it may be necessary to place any limit on the number of Judges who may be absent on furlough at the same time, applications not supported by medical certificate will be granted in the following order:

The Judge to whose credit the greatest amount of furlough remains under Rule II. shall have the preference.

If two or more applicants are on an equality in this respect, the preference shall be given to the applicant whose actual service in a High Court is longest, reckoning in the case of a Judge who has not taken furlough or extraordinary leave from the date of his commencement of service in the High Court, and in the case of a Judge who has taken furlough or extraordinary leave from the date of his last return from such furlough or leave.

If two or more applicants are equal in both respects, the preference shall be given to the senior in the Court.

Privilege Leave.

XIV. Subject to the exigencies of the service, a Judge who has completed eleven months' continuous duty, inclusive of vacations, may, if the Government be satisfied that there is an urgent necessity, but not otherwise, be granted privilege leave for one month without deduction from his salary or acting allowances.

XV. In the same manner, and under the same conditions, an additional month of privilege leave shall be held to accrue to a Judge after each further period of eleven months' continuous duty.

XVI. Privilege leave shall not be taken in instalments, but any balance of privilege leave that may not have been taken shall be added to the next privilege leave which may accrue:

Provided that the whole privilege leave taken at any one time shall not exceed three months, and that any accumulation of privilege leave beyond that period shall be forfeited.

N.B.—Financial Resolution of the Government of India, No. 401, dated 24th April, 1869, shall not be held to apply to a Chief Justice or Judge of a High Court, even though, under Rule XXIII., he may elect to abide by former rules. Whatever rules such an officer may elect, privilege leave shall not be granted to him except on urgent necessity being shown.

General.

XVII. Furlough and privilege leave shall not be taken as such in continuation of each other, but if a Judge absent on one of these classes of leave be allowed to change it for another, the whole period of his absence shall be held to be under the class of leave for which it was changed.

XVIII. Applications for leave shall in all cases be submitted in such manner as the Government may, from time to time, prescribe.

XIX. Leave allowances shall be payable monthly, if payment is taken in India, and quarterly, if payment is taken in England.

XX. No substantive appointment shall be vacated merely by reason of leave being granted under these rules.

XXI. If a Judge shall overstay any leave he shall forfeit all salary during the time of his remaining so absent, and if he shall so continue absent for more than one week his office shall be liable to become vacant.

XXII. No leave, except privilege leave and leave subsidiary to furlough, shall count as service for pension.

XXIII. Each Judge who stood appointed to a High Court on the 7th of August, 1869, and has taken no leave since then, shall, on the next occasion of his taking leave, be given the option of accepting these rules or abiding by those in force before that date for Judges of the High Courts of Judicature. Any Judge who has taken leave since the 7th of August, 1869, must abide by the rules he elected when taking that leave.

N.B.—Under the above rule a Covenanted Civil Servant, who stood appointed as Judge of a High Court on the 7th of August, 1869, may take leave on medical certificate under the rules which were in force before the 1st of July, 1869, for the grant of such leave to Covenanted Civil Servants generally.

XXIV. If a Judge, who is a Covenanted Civil Servant, shall be permitted to resign his office and remain in the service, all leave which he may have taken as a Judge of the High Court shall be reckoned as if it had been taken under the rules for the leave of absence of Covenanted Civil Servants.

XXV. The above rules regarding furlough and leave of absence (I. to XXIV.) are, with the modifications A and B below stated, applicable also to the following officers:—

Barrister-Judges of the Chief Court of the Punjab.

Recorders in Barmah.

First Judges of Small Cause Courts at the Presidency Towns.

Secretary to the Council of the Governor general for making Laws and Regulations.

Modifications above Indicated.

A. The allowances of these officers while on furlough on subsidiary leave shall not exceed half their salaries, and shall be limited also to the rate prescribed in Rule XI.

B. The privilege leave of the officer last named shall be regulated by the Covenanted Civil Service Leave Code.

N.B.—The rule in Notification No. 2,528, dated the 7th August, 1869, as to length of service for pensions, is not republished here, as it does not refer to leave.

No. 3.—Retiring Pensions.

I. A Chief Justice of the High Court at Calcutta, after an actual service of eleven and a-half years as Judge of the High Court, of which period at least half shall have been in the office of Chief Justice, shall receive a pension not exceeding £1,800 per annum.

VI. In the event of a Judge of the High Court, selected from the Covenanted or Uncovenanted Services, receiving a pension under these rules, he will not be entitled to any pension or retiring allowance under the rules applicable to Covenanted and Uncovenanted Servants, respectively.

VII. When a Judge of the High Court, selected from the Covenanted or Uncovenanted branches of the Civil Service, is permitted to retire before completing the full period of service entitling him to the pension of a Judge of that Court, he shall, on retiring, receive such a pension as he would be entitled to under the rules applicable to Covenanted and Uncovenanted Servants, respectively, reckoning the period during which he shall have served as Judge of a High Court towards his time for such pension.

VIII. Provided, however, that if a Judge of the High Court, selected from the Covenanted or Uncovenanted branches of the Civil Service, shall be compelled to retire, on medical certificate, after six years and nine months' actual service, he shall be allowed the option of taking his pension or retiring allowance either under these rules or under the rules applicable to the service to which he belongs.

IX. A Judge of the High Court, selected from the Covenanted Civil Service, shall be required to continue his subscriptions to the Civil Annuity and Civil Service Funds.

X. If a Judge be transferred from one Court to another, the period he shall have officiated in the first Court shall count as service qualifying for retiring pension.

XII. If a Judge of Madras, Bombay, or the North-Western Provinces, be promoted to be Chief Justice of Calcutta, the time he will have served as a Judge will count for pension at the rate of a Judge's pension, and the time he will serve as Chief Justice of Calcutta will count for pension according to the rate of such Chief Justice's pension.

XIII. If a Chief Justice of Madras, Bombay, or the North-Western Provinces be transferred to be Chief Justice of Calcutta, the time he shall have served in the former capacity will count for pension according to the rate of pension of a Chief Justice of Madras, Bombay, or the North-Western Provinces, and the time he shall serve as Chief Justice of Calcutta shall count for pension according to the rate of pension of a Chief Justice of the High Court of Calcutta.

ABSENCE OF GENERAL OFFICERS FROM COMMANDS.

Headquarters, Camp Delhi, Dec. 16, 1871.—Misconception having arisen as to the meaning and intent of G.O. 220 of 1867, that order is now cancelled, and the following substituted:—

"With reference to Adjutant general's Circular No. 88, dated June 15, 1865, republished at p. 127 of the standing orders for that year, para. 3 of which says that the absence of general officers from their divisional headquarters on duty is to be strictly limited to such periods as are necessary for purposes of inspection, 'or any other purely public object,' it is now explained, for future guidance, that it was not intended by the above quotation to authorise a general officer to leave his headquarters for the purpose of visiting stations or depots in his command where cholera had appeared.

"2. During a period of cholera it is the duty of generals of divisions and districts to remain at their proper headquarters, for the purpose of meeting emergencies that may arise; but in cases where general officers consider their presence urgently required at any other station within their command, a reference may be made by telegraph to army headquarters."

QUALIFICATIONS TO PRESIDE OVER COURTS-MARTIAL.

(Headquarters, Camp Delhi, Jan. 1.)

The C. in C. in India, having had under his consideration the composition of general and district courts-martial assembled for the trial of British soldiers serving under his command, desires that in future no officer shall be appointed President of such courts who is not known to be thoroughly competent to perform so important a duty. Whenever it is possible, the President should have had practical experience of the duties connected with European troops.

Should an officer who, by virtue of his seniority of rank, would be available only for the post of President be considered not adapted for the performance of that duty, a special report should be made to the adjutant-general for the information of the C. in C.

ADVANCES—PAY—EMBARKATIONS.

The following general order by the Government of India in the Military Department is re-published:—

In cancellation of previous orders [para. 7 clause 114 of Army Clause of Aug. 1, 1870, published in G.G.O. No. 1163 of Dec. 15, 1870, and G.O. 382 of 1870], H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to notify that, under instructions from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, advances will no longer be issued to detachments of European troops returning to England, but that on their arrival in that country they will be settled with for the period of their voyage by the War Office, the disbursements on account being charged to the Indian revenues.

In order to insure the prompt settlement of claims against the men at the port of disembarkation, on account of any loss or damage of ship-stores, &c., the officer in command of the detachment, if not in possession of sufficient public money, will be provided with the necessary funds by an accountant on the spot, the recoveries from the men of the sums paid on their behalf being made by the War Office.

This order is applicable to the three Presidencies.

FURLONGHS TO OFFICERS ROYAL ENGINEERS.

No. 699, dated Fort William, Nov. 16, 1871.

From Colonel B. E. Bacon, Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department, to the Controller of Military Accounts.

In reply to your letter No. 349H, dated June 17 last, I am directed to acquaint you that the Right Hon. the Secretary of State has decided that officers of the R.E., who hold permanent staff appointments not of a regimental nature, and who may desire to take leave to England under circumstances which by the Furlough Rules of 1868 involve forfeiture of appointment, cannot obtain furlough under those rules. They must, therefore, obtain the leave, if at all, just as any other officer of H.M.'s British troops holding no staff appointment.

But the principle laid down in G.G.O. No. 22, dated Jan. 6, 1870 (without the addendum notified in G.G.O. No. 54 of 1871), and in para. 2 of G.G.O. No. 627, dated June 17, 1870, is applicable to such officers; the three years' service required being reckoned, in the case of those who are completing their first tour of service in India, from the date of their reporting their arrival in this country.

GARRISON INSTRUCTION.

Head quarters, Camp, Delhi, Jan. 17.—The examination of officers attending the first course of garrison instruction in the Bengal Presidency, and at Rangoon, will commence on the 14th February, under detailed instructions which will be communicated to general officers commanding divisions.

The boards of examination will be detailed as far as possible in conformity with para. VII. Horse Guards' General Order No. 65 of 1870. The President should in all cases be a field officer of artillery, or an officer of similar rank who has passed the Staff College.

Garrison instructors will report to the officer commanding the station the date upon which the examination may be concluded, in order that the officers composing the class may be directed to rejoin their regiments without delay.

No examination will be held on the present occasion at Cawnpore or Allahabad.

The second course of garrison instruction will commence in the Bengal Presidency and Rangoon on the 15th February, and general officers commanding divisions and districts are requested to notify the same in orders in sufficient time to ensure the presence at the centres of instruction on the above date of the officers selected to join the classes.

EXAMINATION IN THE NATIVE LANGUAGES.—Mr. C. Thomson, assistant engineer, 2nd grade, attached to the Sylhet division, passed in Colloquial Hindustani on Jan. 5.

No. 549 of the 21st June, 1871, it is hereby notified that £22 will in future be the amount to be disbursed in the Bombay Presidency on account of gratuities to non-commissioned officers and soldiers instead of the sum of £12 previously sanctioned in that order.

No. 497 of 1861] of April 24, 1861."

RAILWAYS—PASSAGE.—The Government of India has been pleased to rule that, in all cases where, under existing rules, an officer travelling on duty by rail is entitled to free passage for his wife and family when accompanying him, but is compelled on account of sickness or other sufficient cause to leave them behind, the free passage may be granted to them at such subsequent date as they may be able to join him. The passage will be given on the application of the officer concerned, who must state that his family was living with him at the time he himself left, and state also why they were unable to accompany him.

LEAVE.—Referring to the orders G.O. No. 295 of 1869, and G.O. No. 135 of 1870, para. 8, permitting an officer to delay his departure for a period of three months, after furlough has been granted him in G.G.O. preparatory to embarkation, it is hereby notified that the Government have ruled that an officer desiring to remain in India in extension of that period must either obtain permission to take the period he may desire to remain as part of his furlough, or cancel his first application and submit a fresh one, which must be dealt with in all respects as if it were an original application. 2. BARRACK MASTERS' WORK.

RESOLUTION BY THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

Dated November 15, 1871.

The Governor general in Council has lately had under consideration several circumstances which render it desirable to reconsider the system under which the construction and repairs of military works within the presidency of Bengal is now administered.

In the first place, several discreditable failures in the construction of the new barracks have taken place. His Excellency in Council is disposed to believe that had the design and construction of these works been entrusted to a selected staff of experienced engineers, these failures would not have occurred. With the extensive operations undertaken in 1864-65, and since carried out more or less to completion, it would hardly have been possible, or, at least, there would no doubt have been difficulty, in carrying on works only by means of selected officers. But now that the press of work is done, his Excellency in Council believes that such a selection can and ought to be made in view to the construction of the few important military projects which remain.

The recent investigations that were made as to the extent of existing barrack accommodation in the plains, and the determination of the Government to place an additional number of European regiments in the hills, have led his Excellency in Council to believe that it will not be necessary to commence any new barracks in the plains upon the standard plan. Thus, as the erection of new buildings is not contemplated, the labours of the Public Works Department in regard to building in the plains will, for the present, be devoted to the completion of those works already in progress, and to their subsidiary buildings.

It is considered undesirable that a number of first-class military works should be carried on in different parts of the country at one and the same time. Rapidity of work has not been secured by this system, and it is considered better to place a full and highly qualified staff in superintendence of a few important military works, press them rapidly to completion, and then transfer the staff to whatever undertaking may stand next in order of importance.

The remaining military projects occur under several different local administrations. It will be convenient, therefore, that the whole of the staff employed on such projects should be under one authority.

The organisation of the Barrack Department has lately undergone consideration, and it has been agreed in both the Military and Public Works Departments that the latter department should again undertake the work, so far as it cannot be done by the Commissariat Department, and that it should be done under the orders of the executive engineers at military stations. It seems desirable for many reasons that this duty should, like that of the other supply departments of the army, be under the Government of India.

Further, it has been found that inconvenience arises in the working of the grant for military works allotted between the several local administrations, which would be removed if the whole was placed under the control of one central authority.

The recent allotments to the several local administrations of provincial funds for public works, the provincial cesses raised in some of these administrations for increasing those funds, and the amalgamation that has in some cases taken place of the controlling staff of provincial and local works, all tend to throw more work on the provincial public works administration, and point to the convenience of relieving those administrations from the control of the military works, in which they are less interested.

It appears, therefore, that it will be proper now to arrange to place the whole of the public works and barrack-masters' work of the stations occupied by European troops of the Bengal Presidency under the control of the Inspector general of military works as chief engineer and chief barrack-master. The Inspector general will thus have the executive control of the barracks and military works generally, and, though attached to the secretariat of the public works department, and in close communication with the military department, will be employed mainly in the executive control and inspection of the works.

From the officers thus transferred the inspector general of military works will select a superintending engineer and a small select staff of executive and assistant engineers and subordinates to form the constructive corps, who will be entirely relieved from the details of petty works, repairs, and barrack masters' duties, and will be specially charged with the large military projects now in hand.

This resolution is not to affect any of the stations occupied by troops of the Madras and Bombay Presidencies.

In regard to small stations and stations occupied only by native troops, no change will take place, except when they are in such proximity to the larger military stations as to make it suitable to place the smaller stations under the same executive engineer who holds charge of the neighbouring large stations.

THE POST-OFFICE IN INDIA.

The following resolution by the Government of India on the Post-office in India is published in the Gazette of India.

Resolution.—The following are the principal events of importance during the year affecting postal operations out of India:—

(1.) The adoption of the Brindisi route in lieu of that via Marseilles. In last year's report it was noticed that this route had been adopted as an alternative one, and it was stated that it secured an advantage of about two days in the time occupied in transit. The Franco-Prussian war having closed the Marseilles route, the Brindisi route completely superseded it. By this new route the postage on letters is less, than on newspapers and book packets rather more, than by the old one.

(2.) An arrangement with the Austrian and Italian Governments for pre-paid through transmission of letters.

(3.) No material change is reported in the steam services in Indian waters, except the extension of the Irawaddy line to Bhamo.

(4.) The rates of inland postage have remained unchanged during the year, and only one important change is recorded, namely, that the system of charge by distance adopted with respect to banghy parcels has been superseded by a uniform rate, irrespective of distance.

(5.) The proposed money order system between England and India is still the subject of correspondence with the Government of India. It is hoped that Mr. Monteath will be able, in communication with the postal authorities in England, to overcome the difficulties of detail that prevent the immediate experimental introduction of the system.

(6.) The Government of India awaits with interest the renewed experiments in connection with the employment of traction engines in India. The engines recently ordered from England are shortly expected in this country.

(7.) The restrictions imposed by the Post-office of England upon the use of the pattern post no doubt caused some inconvenience to residents in this country, accustomed as they were to use it as an ordinary parcel post. The system proposed by the Director general in para. 13 will, if it can be introduced, do much to obviate this inconvenience, and the facilities afforded by it will no doubt be appreciated by the European residents of India.

(8.) The extension of railway communication has necessitated the organisation of a Railway Sorting Department, the work performed by which has attained very large dimensions.

(9.) The Director general notices the bestowal of honorary distinctions by way of title upon five officers of the department:—

Dinobandhu Mitter Rai Bahadur,
Surji Narayn Banerjee Rai Bahadur,
Lalla Saligram Rai Bahadur,
Rai Sahab Ganpat Rao Raghoba, Cursetjee Pallanjee Khan Bahadur, who had distinguished themselves by long and meritorious services in the department.

(10.) The number of Post-offices opened during the year is slightly less than last year, 226 against 262; and the number of letter-boxes opened considerably less, 255 against 515. The Director general explains that the necessity of observing economy in the administration of the department has rendered it necessary to avoid, as far as possible, measures which entailed increased expenditure without any certainty of a corresponding increase of revenue. So far as regards Post-offices, the decrease is chiefly in Bengal; and it is partly made up for, as the Director general observes, by the large increase in the number of rural messengers employed. It is noteworthy, however, that the falling off should appear chiefly in Bengal, Bombay, and the Punjab, which were precisely the circles where last year the increase was greatest. British Burmah shows even less progress than last year.

(11.) The length of postal lines is slightly increased, the most noticeable feature in this respect being the junction of the Bombay and Madras systems of railway. The experiment made with bicycles in the North-West Provinces, though not successful in the particular instance, is far from conclusive against their usefulness.

(12.) The figures given by the Director general under Section III. show a very small increase only in the amount of correspondence that has passed through the post-office. The Director general accounts for this in some measure by showing that one effect of the official postage rules has been to make officers use for bulky letters the cheaper medium of the book post, and this view is corroborated by the increase under that head, and by the increase in revenue from non-official sources. From the detailed statement in para. 30, it appears that there has been an increase by 25 per cent. in the number of "service" (i.e., privileged letters); and if there has been, as is not unlikely, a similar decrease in the number of official letters entered in the other columns of that statement, it would account to some extent for the comparatively small increase shown in the totals of these columns. Judging from the increase in the sale of postage stamps, there must have been an increase in non-official correspondence.

(13.) The proportion of letters directly delivered is much the same as last year. It appears from the Director general's report to be impossible to obtain any return of letters mis-sent. There is a slight improvement, on the whole, in the operations of the dead letter offices, but the improvement is confined to two of the five offices. The percentages shown by the various offices are singularly unequal, and, as the Director general remarks, better results ought to be secured, at least in the Madras office.

(14.) The number of offences reported is slightly in excess of the number reported last year, but is small in comparison with the large number of officers employed in the department. The number of mail robberies in native territory has somewhat decreased.

(15.) The financial results of the year are, so far as regards the purely postal branches, satisfactory. The surplus, including official postage, has risen from twelve to twenty-eight lakhs, and the deficit, excluding official postage, has, for the first time, shown a decrease. Thus, in the second year of its operation, the experiment of doubling the limits of letter weight has resulted in a fiscal advantage to the department.

(16.) The reduction on expenditure from 56 to 52 lakhs bears testimony to the economical administration of the Department.

(17.) The non-postal branches do not show such satisfactory results. The Bullock Train has paid only eight-ninths of its expenses, and in the Punjab Military Van Dak there is also a deficit. The Director general mentions that he is examining the accounts of the various lines with a view of eliminating or reducing the expenditure on those which do not pay their way. These branches of the service should be conducted on purely commercial principles, the persons who use them being made to pay the full value of the service rendered.

(18.) The statistics given in paras. 65 to 68 of the Director general's Report show the steady progress of the work and of the revenue of the Department since the introduction of the new system by the Act of 1854.

(19.) The Governor general in Council has read with much pleasure the favourable report made of the officers named below, and he desires that the commendation of the Government may be conveyed to them:—

Mr. C. K. Dove, Officiating Deputy Director general (since retired).

Mr. Brown, Officiating Deputy Director general.

LORD MAYO'S MURDER.

The following message has been sent out to India from the India-office :—

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE ACTING GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

The Queen has been deeply affected by the intelligence of the deplorable calamity which has so suddenly deprived all classes of her subjects in India of the able, vigilant, and impartial rule of one who so faithfully represented her as Viceroy of her Eastern Empire.

Her Majesty feels that she has indeed lost a devoted servant and a loyal subject in whom she reposed the fullest confidence.

To Lady Mayo the loss must be irreparable, and the Queen heartily sympathises with her under this terrible blow.

Lord Hobart has accepted the appointment of Governor of Madras.

Mr. Arthur Hobhouse, Q.C., has been appointed to succeed Mr. Fitz-james Stephen as Legal Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India.

THE INDIAN BONUS QUESTION.

The following appeared in the Times of Saturday last :—

"Sir,—As one of a body of old Indian officers who for the last ten years have been knocking vainly for justice at the doors of the India-office, I venture to entreat your help in the strait to which we have just been driven by Mr. Grant Duff's ungracious answer to Colonel Sykes.

"I will put our case before you as briefly as possible. In August, 1866, Lord Cranborne promised us compensation, not for the sums we had once expected to receive from our juniors on retirement, but only for the sums we had spent in buying out our seniors, less the value of the increased pay and other advantages thereby accruing. Deductions made on these and other accounts reduced our compensation, in nine cases out of ten, to absolute nothing, or at the best to a few pounds. In June, 1870, Colonel Sykes carried an address to the Crown praying for further inquiry into our case. In reply to a letter from the India-office, the Governments of Madras and Bombay declared in effect that Lord Cranborne's concessions were evasive and unfair to those concerned; and Lord Napier of Magdala withheld his name from the letter of guarded approval sent home by Lord Mayo's Government. It is clear that he for one objected to the mockery of justice involved in the India-office despatch of August, 1866.

Well, last year Mr. Cardwell's Army Bill secured to Queen's officers the full market value of their commissions as they stood before the 1st of November, 1871. A separate clause for the new line regiments had at first offered them compensation according to the terms of Lord Cranborne's despatch—in other words, they were put off with the mockery of justice hitherto doled out to their old Indian comrades. But the injustice of this arrangement became so glaring beside the liberal terms conceded to the purchase regiments that Sir Charles Wingfield carried an amendment which practically placed all her Majesty's regiments on exactly the same footing, by entitling the non-purchase officers to the retiring bonuses they would have received from their juniors had they retired before the new Act became law.

"You will readily understand how greatly the old Indian officers were cheered by the passing of this new Bill of Rights. If their comrades who had joined the new Line regiments were to be thus freely reimbursed for money laid out on objects till then illegal, how much stronger were the claims of those who had looked to receive their retiring bonuses in accordance with the system formally established in 1837 by the Court of Directors and the Ministerial Board of Control! Remember that the bonus system was then finally sanctioned as an avowed means of quickening promotion, and an implied substitute for an increased scale of retiring pensions. In the face of clause 4 in the Act of last year, we fondly hoped that our renewed prayers for justice would at length be granted by the successors of the East India Company. But, thus far, our hopes have been cruelly blighted. In the teeth of old guarantees and of new concessions made to claimants far less strong than ourselves in the mere justice of their case, we are still doomed by the Duke of Argyll and Mr. Grant Duff to satisfy our hunger with the Barmecide feast invented six years ago by Lord Cranborne.

Is it justice, is it common honesty, thus to treat a body of old officers who served their country well in all critical moments, but who have no means of gaining redress for a crying grievance except by a public appeal to that sense of justice which must still lurk, they hope, somewhere in the hearts of the Parliament of England? To this high court of public opinion we would renew our prayer for treatment neither worse nor better than that so lately granted to our comrades in her Majesty's Army.—I am, Sir yours obediently.

"FAIR PLAY."

THE P. AND O. COMPANY AND THE SUEZ CANAL.—It is understood that the Peninsular and Oriental Company will commence making active use of the Suez Canal towards the end of the year by the despatch from Southampton of the first of a regular line of steamers to Bombay.

Miscellaneous.

MAILS TO THE EAST.—The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company announce that an extra steamer was to leave Sydney on Feb. 13, for Point de Galle. The mail will be due in London on the 1st of April. It is also understood that this company will commence making active use of the Suez Canal towards the end of the year by the despatch from Southampton of the first of a regular line of steamers to Bombay.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—A correspondent in Egypt writes :—The Suez Canal Company made their best haul last month. One-hundred ships passed through the Canal, giving 104,773 tons, yielding £47,233. Of these, sixty-nine, 77,296 tons were English, contributing £33,985. This is not bad, if it could be kept up. Not one of the large troop-ships passed through the Canal last month. There were fifty-seven outward bound, against forty-three inward bound.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £600,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 21st inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £415,000; and to Bombay, £185,000. The minimum price was fixed as before at 1s. 11d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 58 per cent., and on Bombay at that price in full. The average rate on Calcutta was 1s. 11½d., and on Bombay 1s. 11½d.

INDO-EUROPEAN TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The report of the Indo-European Telegraph Company for last year has been issued. The receipts in that period were £49,030. 13s. 1d., against £25,268. 1s. 3d. in 1870, and the expenditure was £43,746. 17s. 7d. The company have secured from the German Government a prolongation of their concession for ten years, and negotiations are in progress with the other Governments for similar privileges. A disputed point with the Post-office, relative to a sum of £12,000, has been submitted to arbitration.

EXPORT OF BULLION.—The following were the exports to India by the steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company on the dates given :—From Southampton, per Delta 15th February, 1872 : To Bombay, gold, £55,109 silver £245,850; to Madras, gold, £20,822; to Calcutta, silver, £207,400. We subjoin the exports to India by the steamers of the Messageries Impériales: From Marseilles, per sundry steamers, from 4th February to 15th February, 1872 : To Pondicherry, gold, £1,000; to Madras, gold, £840. Price of Silver : Bar, 5 15 16d. per oz. standard; dollars, 5s. 1d. per oz.; five francs, 4s. 11½d. per oz.

TOMB OF THE ORIENTAL TRAVELLER, MR. G. W. HAYWARD.—We hear that a marble tablet will be placed over Mr. G. W. Hayward's tomb at the cost of the Maharajah of Cashmere. The tablet, with the following inscription, has arrived in Sreenagar, and will be at once despatched to Gilgit :—"Sacred to the Memory of Mr. G. W. Hayward, Medallist of the Royal Geographical Society of London, who was cruelly murdered at Dakeit, July 18th, 1870, on his journey to explore the Pamir Steppe. This monument is erected to a gallant officer and accomplished traveller by his Highness the Maharajah of Cashmere, at the instance of the Royal Geographical Society of London."

ALBERT ASSURANCE COMPANY.—In the Albert Life Assurance Company Arbitration, the valuations of claims both against the Albert proper and against the amalgamated companies have been completed (with the exception of the claims on the Indian policies of the Albert proper), and in three of the amalgamated companies dividends in respect of annuities, free policies, and endowments have been lately declared by the arbitrator, and paid. In the Western Society there has been paid a second dividend of 17s. 6d. in the pound, making 20s. in the pound. In the Family Endowment Society and in the Bank of London Association there has been paid a first dividend of 15s. in the pound. As regards policies of the Albert proper, and those of the amalgamated companies, it is understood that a first dividend of a small amount will soon be paid, but that the difficulties attending the getting in of calls, and the realisation of assets, will delay for some time longer the completion of the liquidation.

THE LATE GENERAL LANE.—General Charles Richard William Lane, C.B., formerly of the Bengal Infantry, died at his residence at Jersey, on Feb. 18, in his eighty-sixth year. He obtained his first commission in the Honourable East India Company's military service as far back as 1807, and during his lengthened career had seen much active service. He was present at the storming of the Palace of Delhi in 1809; and served throughout the Nepal campaign of 1814-15 the Mahratta war in 1817-18 including the siege and capture of Hattarasse, Dhumonee, and Ghurry Mundlah, the siege and capture of Asseergurh in 1819, and against Bheels in 1823. He also served during the Burmese war in 1825-26 for which he received a medal. He was actively employed with the force in Afghanistan under General Nott. He commanded at the defence of Candahar, March 10, 1842, and was present at the different military operations leading to the reoccupation of Cabul by the Candahar division, and for his services during that war he was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath, as well as receiving the medal granted to the troops engaged on that memorable occasion.

THE REMAINS OF LORD MAYO.—The Admiralty paddle yacht Enchantress (Staff Commander Carr) has been brought down from harbour moorings and berthed alongside the dockyard. She will be at once prepared for proceeding to Suez, where she will receive on board from the Glasgow frigate Lady Mayo and suite, with the remains of the late earl, for conveyance to Ireland.

EAST INDIAN FINANCE COMMITTEE.—On Feb. 15 Mr. A. S. Ayrton moved in the House of Commons for and obtained the reappointment of the committee to inquire into the condition of the finances of the Indian Government. On Feb. 16 the hon. member moved—That the select committee on East India (Finance) do consist of twenty-seven members:—Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Stephen Cave, Mr. Crawford, Mr. Baring, Mr. Fawcett, Mr. Beckett Denison, Sir Charles Wingfield, Mr. Eastwick, Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Bourke, Mr. Candlish, Sir James Elphinstone, Mr. Lyttelton, Mr. Birley, Sir David Wedderburn, Mr. Beach, Sir Thomas Bazley, Mr. Hermon, Mr. McClure, Mr. Cross, Mr. John Benjamin Smith, Mr. Grant Duff, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Mr. Robert Fowler, Mr. Haviland-Burke, Mr. Charles Dalrymple, and Sir Stafford Northcote. The motion was agreed to. On Feb. 22 the committee met in room No. 13, House of Commons, to elect their chairman, and to consider the mode of procedure for the ensuing session. Mr. A. S. Ayrton was re-elected chairman of the select committee, the first meeting of which for the examination of witnesses was appointed for Friday, March 1.

THE NEW VICEROY OF INDIA.—The Right Hon. Thomas George Baring, second Lord Northbrook, who proceeds to India forthwith as the successor of Lord Mayo in his Viceregal office, is the elder son of Francis, the first Lord, who was better known by his former name of Sir Francis Baring, and was for many years a member of the Melbourne and Russell Administrations, as Chancellor of the Exchequer and First Lord of the Admiralty, and was born in the year 1826. His mother was a daughter of the late Sir George Grey. He is a member of Christ Church, Oxford, where he obtained a second class in the school of Literæ Humaniores in 1846. He entered Parliament in 1857 as member for Falmouth, which he represented in the Liberal interest down to his accession to the Peerage in 1866. He was a Junior Lord of the Admiralty in 1857-58, Under-Secretary for India in 1859, Under-Secretary for War for a short time in 1861, Under-Secretary for India from 1861 to 1864, Under-Secretary for the Home Department in 1864-66, and Secretary to the Admiralty in the latter year. He was re-appointed to the Under-Secretaryship to the War Department on the accession of Mr. Gladstone to power. His lordship married a daughter of the late Mr. Henry C. Sturt, of Critchill, and Lady Charlotte Sturt; she died in 1867.

THE ARMY ESTIMATES.—The Army Estimates have been issued. They amount to £14,824,500; the net decrease as compared with last year being £1,027,000. There is a decrease in almost every item of the expenditure. The pay of the regular forces is less by £173,900; the vote for the clothing establishments is less by £126,600; and that for the supply of warlike and other stores is less by £620,000, or about one-third. There is an increase of £6,000 for the militia, and £48,700 for provisions, &c. The effective services are estimated to cost £12,547,400, and the non-effective £2,277,100. The decreases on the votes amount to £1,098,500, but some are increased to the amount of £71,300. The regular forces estimated for in the ensuing year number 133,649, being a decrease of 1,398, as compared with the number voted last year. The forces in India number 62,957, being 93 men more than last year. The vote for militia pay and allowances is £963,300, being an increase of £6,050. For the yeomanry cavalry the sum of £79,700 is provided, leaving a decrease of £2,036 mostly in pay and allowances, the number of men being slightly less than last year. For the volunteers £493,300 is required, being a decrease of £12,450. The army reserve force is estimated to cost £124,500. The first class is increased in number by 1,000 men, but the second class is reduced by 5,000. The increase will cost £4,500, but the decrease will amount to £9,000. In the establishments for the supply of warlike and other stores, there is a reduction of £71,624 in wages and £87,857 in metals, but £20,000 more is required for saltpetre and sulphur.

INDIAN FINANCE.—The Home Accounts of the Government of India, just published, show that the total revenue receipts from the 1st of April, 1870, to the 31st March, 1871, were £178,196 8s. 11d. To this is added £2,422,856 5s. from the sale of India Four per Cent. Stock, £792 19s. 8d. received from her Majesty's Treasury in repayment of disbursements in England on account of the Abyssinian expedition, £7,612,463 11s. 2d. instalments of capital received from Indian railway and other guaranteed companies, and £9,258,267 2s. 10d. forming the "remittance account" between England and India. These sums added to a balance brought forward of £5,495,329 2s. 6d., give a total of £22,366,059 16s. 6d. Under the head of disbursements there appear—charges connected with the collection of the revenue and direct claims thereon, £293,038 13s. 6d.; and charges on the revenues of India, £8,196,449 14s. 7d. INDIAN JAILS.—At a meeting of the London Statistical Society on Tuesday evening, Dr. Farr, F.R.S., in the chair, the condition of the Indian prisons was discussed, and much interesting information was elicited. Dr. Mouatt, late director of Bengal prisons, although admitting the introduction of many reforms and much profitable industry in those institutions (mainly through his own exertions), described them as being still generally characterised by demoralisation and unhealthy arrangements. He strongly advocated the adoption of the cellular system in these and other gaols, not merely as preventing moral contamination and physical contagion, but also as enabling efficient punishment and reformation to be secured in comparatively short periods, thus preventing the unnecessary separation and ruin of families. In 1869 the imprisonment of 48,000 persons in Bengal deprived 130,000 wives and children of their breadwinners. Mr. William Tallack, secretary to the Howard Association, mentioned that in Belgium, which contains the best prisons in Europe, the adoption of the cellular system (of separation from evil companions, but with abundant visitation by instructors and others) had safely enabled sentences of twenty years' imprisonment to be shortened to nine years. Thus offenders are the sooner restored to their friends. They are also reformed by religious and secular instruction, and by being compelled whilst in gaol to contribute largely to their own support by industry, and also to earn a sum of money for an honest start after discharge. On the other hand, English prisoners are too frequently suffered to corrupt each other; and whilst costing the ratepayers, on an average, twelve shillings each per week, still earn less than one shilling per week by their gaol labour. Dr. Mouatt thought capital punishment was a deterrent in India, but Mr. Tallack drew attention to the fact that in 1870 there were ninety-seven executions in one province of India, the Punjab (although only six executions took place in England in that year). Now, Lord Mayo's assassin had lived long in the Punjab, and it was, therefore, evident that no reverence for human life had been implanted in him by his experience of laws which held it so cheap. Such a law, indeed, naturally tended to produce assassins. Dr. Guy, Mr. Taylor (of Surrey Gaol), Mr. Robert Rawlinson, C.B., and other gentlemen also took part in the discussion.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, Feb. 19.—THE MURDER OF LORD MAYO.—Mr. B. OSBORNE asked the First Lord of the Treasury if her Majesty's Ministers will take into their consideration the propriety of making some public recognition of the services of the late Viceroy of India, barbarously murdered whilst in the performance of public duties. (Cheers.)—Mr. GLADSTONE: I may remind the House that, as yet we have received no information as to the murder of the Viceroy, except that made known to the public by telegrams; and I am not by any means prepared to say what course it will be the duty of the Secretary of State for India to take when we are in full possession of information on the subject. I have no doubt in some form the question is likely to be one most proper for consideration; and I may say my noble friend the Secretary of State for India has already had the matter under his view, and will be prepared to give to it full consideration when he possesses the information necessary for the purpose. (Cheers.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, Feb. 20.—INDIAN MEASURES.—Sir C. WINGFIELD asked whether any decision had been come to by the Secretary of State for India on laws recently passed by the Council of the Governor-General respecting the metric system of weights, and an irrigation rate chargeable on landowners not using the canal waters.—Mr. GRANT DUFF replied that both the Acts referred to were still under the consideration of the Secretary of State in Council.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, Feb. 22.—THE MADRAS IRRIGATION COMPANY.—Mr. C. DALRYMPLE asked the Under-Secretary for India, with reference to a statement in the House of Commons, under date April 24, 1868, what was the actual state of indebtedness of the Madras Irrigation Company to the Indian Government at the present time, both for direct advances of money and for interest upon the first million of capital raised, and which had been paid from the Treasury since the commencement of that adventure; whether the works of the navigable canal or of the irrigation works now showed any net receipts, after meeting the charges of establishment and maintenance, from which the sums due by the company to the Government could be liquidated; and, if not, whether measures were in contemplation to enforce payment, or to take the works out of the hands of the present management.—MR. GRANT DUFF: In reply to the hon. member's first question, I have to say that the direct advances of money up to January 31, 1872, amounted to £600,000; the interest thereon which had accrued on that date amounted to £86,360. The amount of capital raised by the company is £999,666, on which interest has been paid by the Secretary of State in Council amounting to £511,852. In reply to his second question, I have to say that, according to the latest official returns, the receipts for the twelve months ending November, 1871, were Rs. 9,019, which were not sufficient to meet the charges of establishment and maintenance for the year. In reply to his third question I have to say that the company have been warned that the Government will take measures for enforcing payment of the debentures, aggregating £600,000, as they fall due. The first debenture for £12,000 has to be repaid, with interest, on the 18th of May, 1872. In June £17,000 falls due, in July £12,000, in October £12,000, and so on pretty regularly, the amount of £130,000 having to be paid, with interest, in the financial year 1872-3; but that the Government of India do not consider that the contingency contemplated by the contract of 1866, which would have entitled them to take the works out of the hands of the present management, has arisen.

THE ARMY ESTIMATES.—The House went into a Committee of Supply, when MR. CARDWELL, in moving the Army Estimates, explained at length the general outlines of his new Army Reorganisation Scheme. First, however, he mentioned that there was a gross reduction on last year of £1,027,000, and a net decrease of £1,115,700 (the gross amount this year being £14,824,500). There was no particular reduction either in matériel or men, the saving on the former being due to the completion of certain works and the arming of the Auxiliary Forces; and it would have been larger but for the increase in the price of iron, clothing, provisions, &c. Then, reminding the House of the principles to which it agreed last year—that an army is necessary for the defence of the country, that it must be raised by voluntary enlistment, that all the forces of the country should be united in “one harmonious whole,” and that purchase should be abolished.—MR. CARDWELL went on to relate what had been done during the year in obedience to them. By carrying out the policy of concentration we had now a larger force of regulars at home than at any former period of peace, the number of battalions at home and abroad being exactly equal. During the year, 23,198 recruits had been passed into the Army, and the Inspector-General reported most favourably of their quality. The Militia numbered 112,128 men, being 26,900 short of the establishment voted; and in connection with this point MR. CARDWELL referred to the satisfactory reports received of the Irish militia, and the improvement in the quality of the subaltern officers. With a view to further efficiency it was proposed that a limited number of officers should be allowed to retire from the regular army, receiving half-pay for ten years, on condition of joining one of the militia regiments of their county. Militia officers, also, would be required to qualify themselves for promotion by examination and commanding officers would be superannuated at the age of sixty, and other officers at fifty-five, unless the general officer commanding should report otherwise. In the volunteers there had been an increase of 3,062 efficient, and 4,766 extra efficient. The army reserve now numbered 7,000 (to be raised to 10,000), the militia reserve 28,325, all liable to serve abroad, the second class reserve 25,000 men, so that we had close upon 300,000 men of regulars and militia reserve, and, adding the volunteers, a total force of 461,000, of whom 146,500 were liable to serve abroad. Passing to the question of purchase, he stated that the cost so far had not been so great as was anticipated; and for this year, instead of the £1,600,000 calculated to be necessary by the actuaries, only £855,000 would be asked for. In carrying out the Royal Warrant on promotion, steps would be taken to reduce officers' expenses in such matters as uniforms, bands, and messes; the privileges of the Guards would be abolished, with one or two trifling exceptions which he mentioned, and the Guards' officers would be placed under the same conditions as the rest of the army in regard to examinations, &c. Next he explained the measures taken for accelerating promotion in the Royal Artillery and the Royal Engineers, of which the chief as regards the first were the substitution of the rank of major for first captain, and the employment of a certain number of lieutenant colonels in the reserve forces. On the point of localisation MR. CARDWELL spoke in great detail, quoting from a memorandum of the Commander-in-Chief and a report of General McDougall's committee, which he promised to lay on the table. It was proposed to divide the country into territorial districts, in each of which there would be a battalion of the Line and two militia regiments, and with them would be brigaded the volunteers of the district under the command of a lieutenant-colonel of the regulars, acting as brigadier. Each district would have a local central depot, at which the recruiting, training, &c., would be carried on not only of the militia, but of the reserves, and of the recruits for the Line battalions. By this arrangement there would always be a battalion of a regiment abroad and one at home; one would furnish the other with recruits, and the officers and men of the two would be interchangeable. Assigning about 100,000 of the population to a battalion of militia, there would be sixty-six local central depots in the three kingdoms. There would also be Artillery districts with local central depots each under a lieutenant-colonel of Artillery, at the head of the regular, militia, and volunteer batteries. But the only connection proposed between the Cavalry and the Yeomanry is that the adjutant and the permanent staff of the latter will be taken from the Cavalry, and Cavalry officers will be allowed to retire on half-pay to serve in Yeomanry regiments. Provision will be made for training both the militia and volunteers in camp, and for their training in brigade with the regulars; but though the latter be under the command of the lieutenant-colonel of the district, their internal organisation will not be interfered with. Double commissions are abolished after a certain date, inefficient officers will be dismissed, and volunteers will be compelled to attend the targets, only marksmen being exempted. Finally, in touching on the question of military education, MR. CARDWELL spoke of the great success of the autumn manoeuvres, which it was intended to repeat this year, though the locality was not decided upon, and he concluded by describing the advantages derived from the union of the War Office and the Horse Guards.—The statement was followed by a short desultory conversation on various details, and ultimately the discussion was postponed until March 4, when the explanatory documents will be before the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, FEB. 23.—THE EX-NAWAB OF TONK.—SIR C. WINGFIELD moved an address to the Queen praying that the case of the ex-Nawab of Tonk may be referred to the Judicial Committee, under Section 4 of the Privy Council Act. In support of his motion, which was seconded by MR. R. FOWLER, SIR CHARLES went at length into the history of the case, maintaining that the Nawab had been deposed without any judicial inquiry, and that the evidence taken by the Governor-General's political agents was sufficiently conflicting to justify an independent investigation.—MR. GRANT DUFF opposed the motion on behalf of the India Office. He, too, gave an account of all the circumstances of the outrage for which the Nawab had been dispossessed, prefacing it with a history of the Nawab's family, and its relations towards the British Government. Further inquiry, he maintained, was unnecessary, for the circumstances had been investigated seven different times, and successive Viceroy and Secretaries of State had taken exactly the same view of them. To encourage such appeals would weaken the authority of the Supreme Government.—MR. H. B. SAMUELSON criticised the manner in which the inquiry had been conducted in India, and argued in favour of the establishment of an independent tribunal to adjudicate between our Government and the native princes of India.—MR. EASTWICK did not regard the inquiry into the Nawab's conduct as satisfactory; but, though alive to the danger of appearing to refuse justice to the native princes, this reference to the Privy Council would, he thought, be an embarrassment to the Indian Government, and could do no good to the Nawab.—THE SOLICITOR-GENERAL pointed out that the matter was judicial and not political, and maintained that the Privy Council had neither jurisdiction nor machinery for such an investigation.—MR. W. WILLIAMS was also against the motion, because the facts were all against the Nawab, and because it would be regarded as a censure on Lord Lawrence's Government. The case was rather one for a change in the mode of procedure.—MR. DICKINSON deprecated a reopening of the case, while MR. MORRISON and MR. M. CHAMBERLAIN insisted that a gross act of injustice had been done, which ought to be remedied.—SIR S. NORTHCOTE, the Secretary of State who sanctioned the deposition of the Nawab, maintained that it was useless and impossible to reopen the case, and that as a matter of common sense the Judicial Committee could not deal with the matter. It was doubtful whether the Nawab could be summoned before a British Court, and the Executive had acted solely on political reasons, having no kind of selfish interest in the matter. SIR STAFFORD examined the evidence and the probabilities of the case which had induced him and his Council to agree with the judgment of the Indian Government, and showed that the Nawab had ample knowledge of the inquiry and opportunity for cross-examining the witnesses and defending himself.—MR. M. CULLAGH TORRENS maintained that Parliament was supreme, and suggested a Select Committee as a more fitting tribunal than the Privy Council.—LORD BURY, MR. T. HUGHES, and MR. W. FOWLER insisted that some kind of appeal ought to be provided for the native Princes when they complained of injustice.—MR. G. GREGORY supported a reference to the Privy Council, and MR. BRISTOWE was of opinion that an examination of the facts conclusively demonstrated the guilt of the Nawab.—THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER argued that the duty we had undertaken of keeping the peace in India entitled us, for the protection of the people, to remove any such princes as the Nawab who misconducted themselves. This was a political and not a judicial proceeding; it was not the criminality of the Prince, but the welfare of the people we had to regard, and two successive Viceroy and Secretaries of State had decided that it was our duty to remove the Nawab. Of course, there was an appeal to the House of Commons on the point of policy; but the House ought not to entertain it unless it had a better chance of coming to a right conclusion than those whose judgment was appealed from. As to the reference to the Privy Council—a tribunal consisting entirely of lawyers—besides that this was an issue of fact without a particle of law in it, it would be a serious danger to encourage appeals, and to hold out that India was to be governed, not on principles of an enlightened and comprehensive policy, but by the technical rules of English law. On a division the motion was negatived by 120 to 84.

THE VICEROY ELECT OF INDIA.

The Times thinks that if Lord Northbrook had remained a Commoner his claims to high office and a seat in the Cabinet could scarcely have been overlooked; but as a Peer he was obliged to yield the precedence to fellow Peers whose claims must be admitted to have outweighed his own. His appointment as Viceroy of India redresses a show of injustice that was involuntary because unavoidable. It will be seen how Lord Northbrook's previous experience gives him special qualifications to discharge the duties of Viceroy in India. He has been nearly four years at the War Office, and an efficient and economical organisation of the Army in India is one of the most pressing necessities of Indian government. He was for several years Under Secretary for India, and thus goes to his work with a large knowledge of the Empire he is called upon to govern. He has been for five-and-twenty years actively engaged in official life, and if he has not in that time learnt to judge the capacities of men we should have to pronounce him as unfit: as we believe him to be well qualified for his destined post. With all this varied experience, too, he is still young—not yet forty-six—and endowed with, perhaps, more than the average vigour and strength of his age. It has been the wise custom to select as Viceroy men who had not passed the grand climacteric, and Lord Northbrook is about the same age as Lord Mayo was, and but little older than Lord Dalhousie and Lord Canning were when they were appointed. We may confidently expect from Lord Northbrook a term of office marked by as much diligence, energy, and power of government as that of his predecessor, and the unhappy circumstances of Lord Mayo's death can inspire us with no forebodings for the future. Lord Northbrook has a great work before him. He may be congratulated upon it, and we may congratulate ourselves as a nation that, despite the attractions suggested by the possession of an ample fortune, the glory of serving his country and of following the long line of distinguished men who have built up and maintained the authority of Britain in the East is powerful enough to induce him to forego the pleasures of home and to accept the service to which his Sovereign had called him.

The Standard argues that Lord Northbrook has done nothing in his Parliamentary and official career, so far as that career can be judged by other persons than his superiors in office, to justify his elevation to such an important position as Viceroy of India. Even among his colleagues, the Standard says, Mr. Gladstone might have found a better Viceroy. But if Lord Northbrook is the best man Mr. Gladstone could find in his immediate surroundings, he is certainly not the best man for the office.

The Daily News observes that if Lord Northbrook's friends cannot point to high posts which he has filled in succession, they rely upon his possession of that strength of character and demonstrated wealth of acquirement which only need occasions for their display to yield great services to the State. It is this proved capacity, rather than any detailed acquaintance with the routine of office, which constitutes Lord Northbrook's claim to confidence. It is well that the new Governor-General of India is one whose character inspires this trust; for India never needed sagacity and calmness, together with strength of purpose on the part of her rulers, more than she does now.

INDIAN ARMAMENTS.

The Globe trusts that the removal of Lord Mayo from the post he so admirably filled will not be followed by laxity on the part of the India Office with respect to the defences of the country. Many of the field batteries in India are still armed with the old smooth bore bronze 9 pounder. The rifled bronze guns recently sent to India from this country have proved a total failure, and, although the Cassipore foundry may be more successful in casting bronze, and may thus ultimately become self-supporting, it would be well to arm as many batteries as possible in India with the wrought iron and steel muzzle-loading 9-pounder, which has recently been introduced at home. We are aware that a few guns of this nature have been supplied to India, but many more are urgently required. The 9-pounder rifled muzzle-loading gun has replaced, in the Horse Artillery, the 9-pounder rifled breech-loading gun. The former is a far more efficient weapon, and has justly been described as the most powerful light field gun in the world. It fires a charge of 1 lb. 12 oz. against 1 lb. 2 oz. in the breech loader. The initial velocity is 1,380 feet, against 1,057. The range of the 9 pounder muzzle-loading gun is at 2 degs., 1,800 yards; 5 degs., 2,100 yards; 10 degs., 3,250. The corresponding ranges with the 9-pounder breech-loading gun are 800, 1,700, and 2,900 yards. Possibly the 16-pounder, with which some field batteries at home will shortly be armed, is too heavy a gun for field service in India, but there can be no excuse as regards a sufficient supply of 9 pounders.

MORE CURES (this week) BY DR. LOCKE'S PULMONIC WAFERS.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

GOOD SPIRITS.—Every one has frequently experienced sudden personal changes from gaiety to gloom. The weather oftentimes receives the blame, when a faulty digestion is alone the cause of the depression. Holloway's Pills can be honestly recommended for regulating a dis-ordered stomach and improving digestion. They entirely remove the sense of fulness after eating. They clear the furred tongue, and act as a wholesome stimulant to the liver, and as a gentle aperient to the bowels.
They healthfully rouse both body and mind. Holloway's Pills are the best-known antidotes for want of appetite, nausea, flatulency, heartburn, languor, depression, and that apathy so characteristic of chronic derangement of the digestion.

Summary and Review.

Now that the Indian mails appear to arrive regularly on Monday mornings, the publication of Allen's Mail will in future take place, as in fact it has generally done for some time past, on Monday afternoon instead of Tuesday.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Feb. 12; Agra and Madras, Feb. 10; Calcutta, Feb. 9.

THE Indian papers are still discussing from opposite points of view the conduct of Mr. Cowan with reference to the summary execution of so many Kukas concerned in the late rising. The general feeling however of people nearest the spot tends to justify his proceedings, in view of the effect they appear to have produced on large bodies of intending insurgents. From letters published in the Times also it is evident that Mr. Forsyth regarded the movement as one that needed the strongest measures for its suppression. Meanwhile we hear that several of the native princes have been going to very great lengths of severity against the Kukas in their dominions. In Patiala, Jheend, and Nabha, a regular clearance has been made of Kukas in the public service, and it is said that even Kuka artisans have been driven in numbers out of these States. In Kashmir the Maharajah has followed up his previous expulsion of several hundred Kukas from his army by an order to seize and deport to Jammu every man of that obnoxious sect. What he intends to do with these unfortunates when thus collected, we have yet to learn. It is hardly to be supposed that the Indian Government can have lent its sanction to proceedings of this high-handed sort.

THE Indian mail brings very little news of moment from either column of the Loshai Expedition. The day after the fight with Poiboy's and Lalburah's people, Colonel Roberts with a small body of infantry and half the Peshawar Mountain Battery, drove the enemy out of another village. It was a hard day's work for the troops, who did not return to camp till late that night. On the 30th January General Bouchier's force was halted for a few days to await supplies, which were being pushed forward with some difficulty, owing to the number of coolies and elephants disabled through overwork. Sickness was then increasing, and cholera had carried off several victims along the line of march. A great many of the Europeans were suffering from bowel-complaints caused by the sameness of the diet and, as some think, by the constant use of tinned meats. Fresh beef however was at length being issued twice a week. The weather for the past week had been unsettled, and looking very like rain. General Bouchier's wounds were doing well. On the 3rd February the Left Column was approaching Poiboy's stronghold, Sellam, after crossing a ridge 6,000 feet high. At that date troops and coolies were reported in good health. General Bouchier hoped to reach a village the next day. General Nuthall's Manipore force had just lost a large convoy of provisions which were carried away by a flood. There was some anxiety among the troops as to their chance of reaching home before the middle of March, when the rains begin in that part of the country. Should they set in earlier than usual, there would be trouble in store for General Bouchier.

THE King of Siam arrived at Bombay on Friday, the 9th of last month. His Majesty was met at the Byculla railway terminus by Sir A. Spencer, the Commander in Chief of Bombay, and conducted thence to Government House. Here he was received in State by Sir S. Fitzgerald, who in a set speech invited him to "observe the numerous striking edifices that are rising in various parts of the city," and hoped that his Majesty would be "struck with the well-ordered appearance" of one of the most populous and healthiest cities in the world. The royal visitor had been splendidly entertained a few days before in the Kaiserbagh of Lucknow by the talookdars of Oudh, and a day or two afterwards by the United Service Club in the same capital. On the 7th he started from Lucknow by way of Jabalpure for Bombay. The Times of India describes his Majesty as "a sharp-looking, pleasant-featured little king, with quite an Aryan cast of countenance."

The Delhi Camp of Exercise has become a thing of the past; its last days having been devoted to soldiers' games, committees, and artillery practice, chiefly against strong stockades. One battery, armed with the new wrought-iron 9-pounder, made very good shooting on the whole, but appear to have done no serious damage to the solid timber logs. Even the old 24-pounders failed to "knock the tough timber out of place." Lord Napier of Magdala had gone off to the Central Provinces, after issuing a farewell order to express his great satisfaction with "the excellent discipline of the troops, both European and Native, and the zeal and soldierly spirit" with which they entered into the work before them. His Lordship also gives full credit to the supply and medical departments, and thanks all the commanding officers for the help they rendered him. At the same time he takes care to remind them that cantonments are the proper place for teaching the mere rudiments of war, and desires that officers shall be exercised as often as possible in the work of higher grades than their own.

THE Times Correspondent, we observe, warns us against the likelihood of another rising in the Santhal country, due apparently to causes like those which brought about the alarming outburst of 1855. The Santhals are already gathering in large bodies, and threaten mutiny if their grievances against the Bengali mahajans or money-lenders, and the zemindars, are not redressed within two months. This storm seems to have been brewing for some few years past. It is the old story of grinding usury and unfair exactions enforced by the abler against the ruder race.

AMONG items of a more personal nature may be mentioned the report that Colonel Phayre would shortly proceed on furlough, Sir H. Green taking his place as Superintendent of the Sindh Frontier. It is also stated that Colonel R. C. Lawrence, C.B., being about to go home on sick leave, the post of Resident in Nipal would probably be filled by Colonel James. Surgeon W. P. Kelly has been appointed Inspector-General of Jails, and Sanitary Commissioner for British Burmah. Mr. Rivett Carnac reappears at Allahabad as Statistical Reporter of Commerce. It is also believed that Colonel J. T. Barr will shortly cease to be British Resident at Baroda.

FROM the Bombay papers we learn that the Northern Lights were plainly visible in Bombay on the night of February 4. Beginning soon after sunset, as it did here, the Aurora kept growing and changing colour, until about 3 A.M. of the next day it had become a deep violet. It was distinctly seen, says the Times of India, till sunrise. The cold at the time appears to have been "unpleasantly keen," and all telegraphic communication was stopped for some hours. So strong was the magnetic disturbance at 8 A.M., that both sections of the British-Indian Cable were equally affected. The Aurora was very brilliant at Aden also. Magnetic disturbances of the same kind appear to have occurred about the same time in many other parts of India, and on both sides of the Bay of Bengal. It had been hoped that means of neutralising their effect on submarine cables had at length been found, but the hope has hitherto been fruitless.

FROM the Indian papers we learn that the late Viceroy had visited the jail, school, and timber-yards of Maulmain on the 5th February, besides taking part in a handsome entertainment given by the residents of Maulmain in the famous caves near that city.

At the meeting of the Legislative Council on the 30th January, Mr. Stephen's Bill, for superseding oaths of Hindus and Mussulmans by simple declarations in the law courts, was strenuously opposed by Mr. George Campbell, who avowed his belief that to discard the use of oaths among a people who never by any chance spoke the truth for truth's sake, was to sacrifice a good engine for eliciting the truth. His arguments so far prevailed that the Bill was recommitted for further consideration. The preliminary report of the Select Committee on the Bill for enlarging the powers of Mofussil Courts with regard to European British subjects was then read. It is proposed that English magistrates in the provinces, who are also justices of the peace, shall have power to try Britons for offences punishable with three months' imprisonment or a fine of Rs. 1,000, and that Sessions Judges shall have power to punish the same class of offenders with a year's imprisonment or a corresponding fine. From these courts an appeal would be allowed to the High Court, while any trial before them might be avoided by at once applying to the High Court for a writ of habeas corpus. Moreover, when the trial in the local court takes place before a jury, the Sessions Judge, if he disagrees with the jury's verdict, may at once remit the whole case to the High Court. These proposals seem to offer a fair compromise between the demands of theoretic justice and the long-standing dislike of Englishmen to be tried, as all natives and Europeans of other than the ruling race are already triable, by the local courts.

At the same meeting Mr. Stephens presented the second report of the Committee on his Evidence Bill, the first draft of which had called forth a strong show of hostile feeling on the part of the Indian Bar. From what he said on this occasion we may hope that the changes he has introduced into the Bill will go far to allay the storm provoked by its first appearance.

A CALCUTTA telegram of the 28th February states that on the 26th General Brownlow was sending out detachments to survey the Loshai country. He expressed himself thoroughly satisfied with the arrangements made between Captain Lewin and the Howlong Chiefs. When he wrote the camp was crowded with Howlongs bringing in provisions from the country.

LORD NAPIER, Governor of Madras, arrived at Calcutta on the 23rd February, and took his seat at once in the Council as acting Viceroy.

ACCORDING to a Calcutta telegram of February 29, Major Burne, the late Viceroy's popular Secretary, has been retained in the same post by the acting Viceroy, Lord Napier.

A Times telegram of this day's date announces the substantial end of the Loshai Expedition, and the return of the troops; whole tribes of Sylhoos having through their chiefs accepted the terms already imposed on the Howlong Loshais. Lady Mayo leaves Calcutta to-morrow on her way to England via Bombay.

AN "Anglo-Indian," writing to the Times, appears to have a tangible grievance against the Custom-house people at Southampton, who refuse to pass over the gangway, on the arrival of the Indian Mail steamer, "anything but the smallest handbags." This involves a good deal of inconvenience to passengers anxious to get on shore without delay, especially when the steamer arrives at Southampton late on Saturday night. On the occasion to which "Anglo-Indian" refers, the only available train for London left at nine A.M. on Sunday; but it was an hour afterwards before any passenger could get his luggage passed through the Custom-house. "Anglo-Indian's" luggage consisted only of a portmanteau, carpet-bag, and one or two other things, which might, he thinks, have easily been overhauled at the gangway, so as to save him many hours delay in starting for London, instead of having to wait till the six o'clock train on Sunday evening. There were sixty other passengers, he says, in the same plight. He grumbles also at the neglect of the South-Western Railway to arrange for their early conveyance to town. As the Mail steamers are likely often to arrive on Saturday, it is to be hoped that the railway authorities will venture to put on a mid-day train on Sundays for the benefit of impatient passengers from the East, and that those who travel as lightly equipped as "Anglo-Indian" may be allowed to pass their luggage over the gangway as soon as a fair search has been made among its contents.

MR. CARDWELL's new scheme for re-arranging the regiments of the line in battalions grouped into local brigades, each furnished with its complement of militia, carries out in its main features a long-desired reform. Henceforth, if the plan passes through Parliament, each regiment of foot will consist of two battalions attached for recruiting purposes to a particular district; one battalion reserved for home duty, the other sent out to India or one of the colonies. There would always be seventy battalions stationed abroad and seventy-one at home, and each of the latter would feed its sister battalion abroad. The first twenty-five regiments are already formed into two battalions, but nearly all the remainder will have to be paired together for the purpose designed by Mr. Cardwell. The 26th Cameronians for instance will be doubled up with the 99th Foot, the 27th Inniskillings with the 108th Madras Regiment, the 35th Foot with the 107th Bengal, the 101st Bengal Fusiliers with the 104th, and so on. In most cases some attempt is made to link together regiments supposed to be recruited from particular counties or kingdoms; the 28th and 61st, for instance, bearing the same local designation, are told off to the same district, and will become, we presume, battalions of one regiment. In the same way the 101st and 104th Foot, which have always been largely recruited from Ireland, are to have their head-quarters at Monaghan. But it is not so easy to see why the 105th Foot should be paired off with the 51st West York Regiment, or the 107th with the 35th Sussex, or the 109th with the 63rd Suffolk. Some of these old Indian regiments indeed appear in their new connection "very like flies in amber," as a contemporary puts it, with reference of course only to the last line of Pope's couplets. We certainly, as they stand, can hardly help wondering "how the devil they got there." Would it not be better, for example, to link the 102nd with the 105th, or even, as somebody suggests in the Times, with the 103rd Bombay Fusiliers? But these are questions of detail, which further discussion may point out better modes of solving.

We note that the Indian Army Defence Committee are still troubled with a bee in their bonnets, in the matter of Mr. Cardwell's Army Act and its bearing on the case of their own clients. They cannot get it out of their heads that Clause IV. of that Act offers the claimants of bonus compensation "nothing more than Lord Cranborne's despatch of 1866 bestowed." This strange hallucination is partly explained by their funny way of interpreting some words in the previous Clause, which enact that no officer on retirement shall receive, "in pursuance of this Act, more than he would have received if the Act had not passed." This manifest provision against fraudulent claims is again put forward as a death-blow to the hopes of those officers who would find their Bill of Rights in Clause IV. of the Army Act. But the meaning of that Clause is simply this, that officers in the new line regiments shall be paid a full equivalent for the sums they would have received from their juniors, had they retired before November, 1871. According to Clause III., if that has anything to do with their case, they are debarred from receiving more under the new Act than they would have got before it was passed. In other words, they are to get the market value of their commissions, and no more. But this is exactly what the old Bonus Committee are asking when they rest their claims on "the principle of Clause IV." To those who are content with the plain ordinary meaning of simple words, the construing of that clause presents no difficulty whatever. The Bonus Committee have not been fighting for the last three years against the terms of Lord Cranborne's despatch in order to stultify themselves by asking only for what was yielded in 1866. The terms of that despatch offered a certain shadowy compensation for the sums each officer had paid towards buying out his seniors, whereas the principle of Clause IV.—as we are tired of repeating—would compensate him for the bonus he expected in due time to receive from his juniors. But some people, it seems, have a knack of reading this simple Clause, as some clergymen read the Thirty-nine Articles, in a non-natural sense. And why Clause III. should be lugged into this particular question is more than we can understand. When Colonel Phillips's clients ask for treatment on the principle of Clause IV., and of that Clause only, what is the good of trying to stop their mouths with futile references to another Clause with which they have no direct concern? If they had asked in general terms to be treated like those who come under the Army Act of last year, such a proceeding might be defensible. But seeing that they rest their claims on one specified section of that Act, a section whose real meaning may be found in the bonuses already awarded in pursuance thereof to several old Indian officers, all such references to another part of the Act may be set aside as irrelevant surplusage. If the new Committee were wise they would not waste precious time in vexatious splitting of verbal straws. Whether they go in for help or hindrance to the objects of the older Committee, it is certain that the latter and their friends in Parliament are perfectly able to take care of the interests committed to their charge.

LORD NORTHBROOK has offered the post of Military Secretary to Colonel Arthur Ellis, Equerry to the Prince of Wales; but that gentleman, who served in much the same capacity under Lord Elphinstone at Bombay, has declined the offer on the ground of his health, which was greatly impaired by his former residence in India. The post has since been accepted by Captain Baring.

WE understand that Lord Northbrook will go out to India in about a fortnight. It is expected that he will catch the Glasgow, which is bringing home Lord Mayo's remains, at Suez. The Mayor of Winchester gives him a banquet on the 9th, to which the principal members of the Home Government of India have been invited.

THE Indian Finance Committee of last year resumed its sittings on Friday, the 1st March; Major-General Sir T. Pears and Mr. T. L. Secombe, Military and Financial Secretaries to the India Office, being examined together on the subject of pensions and retiring allowances paid in this country to servants of the Indian Government. It came out in evidence that the salaries of certain clerks in the India Office are smaller now than they used to be in the good old days of the East India Company, while the general cost of the Home Establishment has materially increased. Evidence was also taken regarding the large outlay on English soldiers and recruits sent out to India, and both witnesses, we believe, declared that the present scale of charges under this head, as laid down by the War Office, was exorbitant.

A more detailed report of the evidence will appear in our next issue.

THE BARDWAN FEVER.

THE deadly fever which for ten years past has at a certain season played havoc in the districts of Bardwán, Naddea, and Húghly, appears to have once more raged with all its olden malignancy last autumn. Looking at the papers published in the Calcutta Gazette, we are not surprised at the natural outcome of conditions so fatal to human life, as those described by the medical officers who report on the fever. The gradual conversion of "a well-drained, healthy, and prosperous tract of country into the condition of the Lincolnshire fens of many years ago, with a subsoil water-logged and exhaling marsh poisons for the population to absorb," fully accounts in Dr. Payne's opinion for the cruel ravages of a disease which slays or disables many thousands yearly within a given area, attacking rich and poor, clean villages and dirty, with stern impartiality. The people in these three districts are manifestly suffering from the disease so common in all marshy regions. Even when the surface of the ground is quite dry, mischief during the fever-season lurks in the sodden soil beneath. "Every wayside puddle shows that there is stagnant water within a foot of the surface," even in the month of November, and the general state of the subsoil may thus be easily inferred.

No one disputes that these sad results are mainly due to the change caused in the drainage of the country by the mode in which so many of the railway embankments have been thrown up across the lines of natural drainage. That there has been a gradual silting up of the natural outlets for the rain and flood waters of the monsoon, is spoken of by Dr. Payne as an established fact; and for this the new embankments are held to be mainly answerable. There is evidence that some of the watercourses which are now unequal to the drainage of the adjacent fields, were once navigable by large vessels; and it seems no longer doubtful that this result has been greatly accelerated by the Damudah embankment, intercepting as it does the volume of water which used yearly to scour the small river-channels and maintain their proper depth. Another evil consequence of these embankments, namely, the extent to which they keep the river silt away from the lands it once used to fertilise, appears to have no necessary connection with the fever itself, however greatly it may tend to impoverish the country and aggravate the general distress. We are sorry to hear that the fever was again increasing in Bardwán, where Dr. Jackson the Sanitary Commissioner, had for the time being taken up his abode. Nine dispensaries had already been established there, and a medical officer, with twenty-two native assistants, placed under the orders of the district civil surgeon. Very liberal also has been the help afforded, in the shape of 50,000 rupees, by the Rajah of Bardwán. In spite, however, of private charity and Government aid, more help is urgently needed; many more native doctors are eagerly asked for, and the Lieutenant-Governor has formally invited the sympathy and aid of the general public towards the relief of a large and populous district laid waste by sickness and consequent distress. All such measures, however liberally applied, can only mitigate the temporary fruits of a chronic evil. As the Englishman rightly argues, "nothing short of a large and comprehensive scheme of drainage will suffice" to grapple with the true cause of all this suffering.

MR. COWAN AND THE KUKA OUTBREAK.

"A BODY which is believed to be a hundred thousand strong, bound together by a common fanaticism, and perhaps a common impatience of foreign rule, will need some careful watching in the future, even if its old faith in one particular leader may have been sorely shaken by passing events." Such were the words with which, last November, we concluded our remarks on the Kuka movement in the Punjab, at a time when its collapse was viewed by many people on the spot as an actual certainty consequent on the stern measures taken against the murderers of Raikot and Amritsar. Later events have proved, we regret to think, the justice of our forebodings. Whether Ram Singh himself had any direct share in bringing about the abortive rising near Ludiana, signifies little or nothing to the purpose. Even if he did give the authorities timely warning, and on that point also the evidence is far from clear, is in fact on the whole against him, his reasons for doing so may have been wholly unconnected with any stirrings of loyalty to the Indian Government. He may for instance have hoped in this way to restore his waning influence over his followers, or to save the bulk of them from joining prematurely in a hopeless enterprise. His own proceedings and purposes apart however, we can hardly suppose that the attack on Malodh and Malair-Kotlah meant nothing more than an isolated outbreak of a few hundred desperadoes. The country around them contained the birthplace of the new fanaticism; it was bare of troops and full of old Sikhs, who might wish well to the Kuka movement; one successful stroke might raise a multitude in arms against the Government before an English soldier could cover the two hundred miles between Delhi and the scene of danger. It is even asserted, and may be true, that the concentration of so many troops at Delhi for a sham campaign had created or developed the belief that something was going wrong with us in that part of India. According to the Punjab Times, it has been ascertained "beyond a doubt that the rising was neither a raid nor a great dacoity, but a rebellion," got up in the name, if not with the sanction, of Ram Singh by his more daring and ambitious subalterns, and to some extent foreseen by the officers of the local government. "Warrants of arrest were prepared and signed, and held in readiness to be used at any moment." A writer in the Friend of India talks of "ample evidence that the Kuka sect is fast spreading, and that the more turbulent of its members have for the past year determined to advance from the merely religious stage to one of political action." It was arranged, he adds, at a fair lately held in Ram Singh's village, that a party of Kuka desperadoes should attack the defenceless state of Kotlah, in order to supply themselves and their friends with arms and horses; and some of the prisoners, we are told, have since confessed that the spread of rebellion was to be followed by an attack on the Sikh States of Nabha, Jheend, and Patiala. Small bands of Kukas were also reported as gathering on all sides round Kotlah, and not a few of the same sect appear to have been lately selling their lands and parting with their goods in order to join in some enterprise planned by their "Guru."

Under these circumstances, the extent of the danger with which Mr. Cowan and Mr. Forsyth had to grapple can hardly be measured by the ease with which the first overt rising was put down. It was very fortunate for us that the prompt movements of the former officer were so powerfully seconded by the zeal of the neighbouring Rajahs and the good conduct of their troops and policemen. Had these been less forward in our behalf, there is no telling how far the rising might have spread before our troops from Delhi appeared on the scene. In a country like India, where the latent disaffection is always ready to burst forth, such things must be promptly suppressed on pain of worse to follow. If the mutiny at Merut in 1857 had been taken in time by General Hewitt, there would have been no massacre at Delhi, no widespread revolt perhaps in Upper India. In view of what happened at Kotlah and Malodh, of what seemed likely to happen at any moment elsewhere, Mr. Cowan saw fit to make a prompt and terrible example of the misguided wretches who first fell into his hands. That forty-nine of them should have been blown away from guns without form of trial, may seem, as nakedly stated the other day by Mr. Grant Duff, a deplorable event. But the writers from whom we have quoted declare, at any rate, that the doom inflicted on these men was not passed without full consideration, while the fact of their being taken red-handed may well excuse the omission of what in their case would have been a superfluous form. Even if Mr. Cowan exceeded his powers as deputy-commissioner, the need of the moment viewed in connection with Mr. Forsyth's subsequent proceedings would go far to condone the seeming irregularity. The execution of sixteen more prisoners by order of the well-known Commissioner of Umballa would seem to indicate no want of justice in the previous executions. Mr. Cowan has been suspended during the inquiry ordered into his proceedings; but the plea of a great public emergency may in his case be upheld by a reference to known results. When the Kuka bands advancing on Malair-Kotlah heard of the punishment awarded to their comrades, they scattered and fled, we are told, in all directions; and thus by one act of timely if extreme severity the growth of a great political danger was cut short, at the expense of a passing shock to our humanity, and of a trifling departure from official routine. If the view we have taken of this sad affair be anywhere near the truth, we may expect soon to hear that Mr. Cowan has resumed his duties without a slur upon his fair fame.

PUNISHMENT OF THE KUKAS.

The Indian Daily News thinks there can be little doubt that the punishment inflicted on the insurgents was horrible; but remedies must be proportioned to the diseases against which they are levelled, and it remains to be seen whether the disease in this case was so virulent and wide-spread as Mr. Cowan honestly believed, and most people still believe, it to have been. The dead calm which has suddenly succeeded the insurrection, and imparted an appearance of insignificance to it, has not only inspired some people with courage and eloquence, who would probably have acted and spoken differently if the uprising had not been nipped in the bud, but has also misled persons who, being unfamiliar with native conspiracies, are ignorant how rapidly and noiselessly really dangerous conspiracies subside in India on the first symptom of failure. Mr. Cowan's complete justification will be found in the fact, if fact it be, that crowds of Kukas were hurrying up from all parts of the country to join in the movement, when they were suddenly arrested by the news of the collapse of the movement on Malodh. If it be true that the whole Kuka body, or any large portion of them, had actually resolved on making one grand struggle, then there can be no question of the fact that the sudden collapse of the movement—however brought about—has averted great bloodshed. This consideration needs greater attention than it seems as yet to have received at the hands of some writers, who are greatly impressed with "the sacredness of human life," but who strangely forget that the lives of thousands are not less sacred than the lives of sixty-five fanatics. We regret to have been forced to an expression of opinion on the subject, before all the facts of the case are placed before the public; but no other course was possible after some of our well-meaning but apparently ill-informed contemporaries had prejudged the matter, in avowed independence of any facts which might subsequently be established.

IRRIGATION WORKS.

The Englishman holds that while it is almost impossible to mitigate, it is possible altogether to avert famine. The control of the water supply is a question which does not arise in a temperate climate like that of England. But in a tropical country it is one of the very first duties with which a Government is bound to grapple. Practically, the only adequate solution hitherto found for the question has consisted in a system, more or less extended, of canals. The monarchs of antiquity who have most firmly impressed their names on Egyptian and on Asiatic history have been those who first organised the irrigation works, which alone stood between their people and chronic peril of famine. The depopulation of great empires, like that of Babylon, is now found to be due to the decline or gradual destruction of these works. An Asiatic kingdom very easily bears a change of master, the downfall of a dynasty little affects a people of husbandmen, but the neglect or ruin of its canals means the desolation of the country and the extinction of the race. It mattered nothing to the Chinese a few years ago whether the Imperialists or the rebels conquered, but the destruction of their irrigation system would have by this time reduced the celestial empire to the state of the ancient countries of Western Asia which Rawlinson describes. Such enterprises can only be conducted by a Government, for they demand an amount of capital and co-operative industry which no Asiatic people can supply; for example, Oudh and the Punjab stand most urgently in need of canals, but to tell the people of these provinces that they have full liberty to make them, would be casting a stone to them when they asked for bread. Yet it is clear that canals are of the nature of local works, that they are intended for the protection of the local population, and that the benefits which the rest of India derive from them are merely secondary and indirect. It would clearly be an injustice to charge the European community of Calcutta in the form of a high income-tax for averting famine from the races of the Punjab. Nevertheless, the experience of the canals hitherto made is that for many years they do not pay the cost of construction. Somebody, however, has to bear the burden. The immobility of an Indian peasantry delays their availing themselves of the boon which has been placed within their reach, and millions of tons of water which would carry with them wealth to the land and security against famine to the husbandmen are returned unused to the river. It is not till a year of famine comes; then a scramble for water takes place, and the people go on using it ever afterwards. Meanwhile, the population has been decimated by starvation, large remissions of the land-tax have to be made, and the interest account on the Canal capital has swelled the sum originally invested so as to render it difficult for Government ever to recoup itself for the loss. This is one great source of the unprofitableness of Indian canals. But it is not the only one. Canal projects are almost always started by the Provincial Administrations, and so long as they know that the losses which they involve will be borne by the general tax-payer, so long shall we be afflicted by extravagant irrigation schemes. It is clear that the Provincial Government, which causes the expenditure, should be responsible for it, and that, as far as possible, canals should be dealt with as local public works. Heretofore a Local Administration had only to show that a public work was needed in order to get the money to construct it; the cost being transferred to the Imperial Exchequer, and having to be borne by the tax-payers in distant provinces. But surely if decentralisation means anything, it means that public works constructed for the convenience or protection of a locality should be defrayed by the local public. Various schemes have been propounded for giving effect to this principle, but with regard to the justice of the principle itself, there can, we think, be no doubt.

MURDER AND THE MADRAS POLICE.

The Madras Times observes that out of two hundred and nineteen cases of murder, only eighty-three were prosecuted to conviction. That is only a little more than one-third, and the report says that it was a "poor average." Again, we are told that out of four hundred and fifty-five persons said to be concerned in murders, only one hundred and eleven, or not quite one-fourth, were finally convicted and punished. Here, then, we get a good deal of light thrown on the subject. When a man commits a murder he knows that he has two chances of escape against one of being convicted. We do not say that in every case where a murder is committed that the man goes through a regular series of chances in his mind before he commits the act, but in many cases there is no doubt but that he does. He hears of people who have got off, and he thinks that if he commits the crime he may be equally fortunate. We all know that the greatest deterrent from crime is the certainty of punishment. When men were hanged in England for stealing a sheep or picking a pocket, numbers were let off by juries who would most certainly have been convicted if the punishment had been lighter. This uncertainty led to crime, for the perpetrators calculated the chances of getting off just as they would have bet on a horse. Just so, we fancy, is the way the murderers do in India. They think that they will get clear off, for they see very few who are suspected of murder hanged. Again, the murderer, if he is convicted in the Mofussil, must have his sentence confirmed by the High Court, and it may be that his sentence may be commuted, as is often the case. What is the remedy in this case? The old thing, more efficiency in the police. They must be able to prosecute more cases to conviction than they do at present. If there was more certainty that punishment would follow the crime of murder, there would not be so many cases of it as there are at present. Till we see a change in this respect, we may expect to see a good number of these offences taking place in different parts of the country.

SHAKY CALCUTTA HOUSES.—We are in a position to state that some serious trade complications are likely to occur, if, indeed, they have not already occurred, in Calcutta. According to our information, several European houses have been placed in a critical position, owing to the heavy advances they have made on native consignments; others, again, are almost paralysed by the receipt of protested drafts under peculiar circumstances. They made large shipments "to order," and drew against them to the extent, in some instances, of 75 per cent. on invoice valuation, the drafts having been negotiated at the banks. These drafts were accepted by the drawers, who, of course, were consignees of the shipments. On the faith of these acceptances, shipping documents were handed over to them by the holders, and the drawers were enabled thus to effect sales "to arrive," receiving advances thereon. When the bills arrived at maturity, they were protested for nonpayment, and sent back to the drawers, who have, therefore, either to make good the several amounts, or shut up! The shipments, in the meantime, are either on their way home, or, arriving in Calcutta, will necessarily fall into the hands of those who hold the shipping documents. The holders of these happen to be the purchasers, who will naturally refuse to part with the goods until their claims are satisfied; hence, drawers, who are represented at home by powers of attorney, will have to come down on the drawees, who, again, will doubtless tell them to whistle for their money, and be content with such dividends towards the liquidation of claims as the estates respectively will be in a position to pay. On the other hand, there will be a nice scramble for those shipments which have been sold "to arrive" but have not reached their destination. Holders of powers of attorney will claim them on right of unsatisfied hypothecation drafts; purchasers will have their claim on unsatisfied bills of sale; the upshot will probably be legal proceedings; and any one acquainted with mercantile laws and usages need not to be told who are likely to come off victors—who to grief. Possession is nine points of the law, as the unfortunate drawers will find, as hundred others in similar circumstances have, ere this, found to their cost.—Oudh Excelsior.

SUPERSESSION IN THE EDUCATIONAL SERVICE.—The nomination of Mr. Cordery to the post of Director of Public Instruction in the Punjab is, we believe, defended by the Lahore authorities, on the ground that it is only a temporary arrangement to meet a difficulty about providing him with a suitable post immediately on his return to his country. We think, however, that the time has arrived when the bestowal of the directorship within the department should be established as a general principle. The Directorship of Public Instruction is the one prize in each province to which the graduates, who now form the rank and file of the Indian Educational Services, are able to look forward. Even this prize is an insignificant one, when compared with the brilliant prospects open to every coveted, revenue, or judicial officer of talent and ambition; for, in no case, do its emoluments exceed those of a civil and sessions judge, whilst, in many provinces, they are far smaller. When we remember that no reciprocity is possible—that in no case can an educational officer be promoted to any far place in the revenue or judicial lines—we cannot wonder at educational men feeling that their claim should be preferred to that of outsiders. It is true that during the infancy of the service—it has only attained its present status, as recruited from the Honour Lists of the Home Universities, during the last ten years—it was rightly deemed advisable to give strength and prestige to the young department by appointing as its ruler some well-known covenanted civilian. But that condition of affairs exists no longer; and every man who has of late years been appointed by the Secretary of State to a professorship in India from Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin, has, undoubtedly, come out here under the full belief that he will rise, if he retain his appointment and deserve the promotion, through the grades of the Department, as vacancies may occur. It would be idle to say that extraneous prestige is needed for a service which has given to the world of letters and science such men as Sir Alexander Grant, the present Principal of the University of Edinburgh; Mr. Cowell, the learned Professor of Sanskrit at Cambridge; and Dr. Martin Haug, Professor of Sanskrit at Munich—all of whom earned their reputation whilst professors in the Indian Educational Service. Whilst worthy successors to such men as these are to be found in the Department, nothing but the most urgent necessity can justify their supersession. The necessity for finding a temporary refuge for a Deputy Commissioner, however brilliant he may be, can hardly be termed urgent; and we venture to predict, with some confidence, that the Secretary of State will find it difficult to maintain, in its future appointments, the present high standard of his University nominees if such necessities are found to recur frequently.—Englishman.

THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX.

The reply of the Government of India to Sir W. Muir's letter on the Income-tax Minute is published. In the second paragraph of the reply the Government vindicate themselves by attaching to the terms of their Minute a meaning which shows conclusively that they do not understand the subject with which they are dealing, and which, though it is their literal meaning, Sir W. Muir probably hesitated to assign to them, only because he was unwilling to believe their authors to be utterly deficient in common sense. It was the intention of the Government in the thirteenth paragraph of their Minute, says the reply in question, to interdict not only the making of assessments, but the conducting of any inquiries for the purposes of assessment, by any officer under the rank of Tehsildar. The Tehsildar, or some superior officer, is to go to the spot where the assessee resides, and there personally conduct the necessary investigations.

We will not say that this precaution is absolutely impossible, but we can say without hesitation that as a remedy for existing evils it must be utterly useless. The Tehsildar on the spot will be as helpless without the evidence of others as he would be in his own cutcherry; and the personal knowledge that would enable him to check the evidence on which he most depends is not to be acquired in the short period he will be enabled to devote to each local investigation.

If a man's means could be ascertained by simple inspection, or if even the same tangible evidence regarding them were accessible to the inquirer in India as in England, the difficulty would not arise. As it is, nothing but the most intimate personal knowledge, derived from long experience on the spot, can enable an assessor to do his work with even approximate accuracy. Such personal knowledge no Tehsildar or superior officer can possibly possess with regard to more than a tithe of the people he is called upon to assess.

We regret to see not only that the entire tenor of this letter shows that the Government of India are as far as ever from understanding the objections to the tax, but that its last paragraph distinctly indicates the absence of all intention on their part to relent from their obstinate adherence to views that have been condemned by the entire public, official and non-official, throughout the country.

It is, we fear, to England alone that we must look for relief from this irritating impost; and a more favourable opportunity for pressing for such relief could hardly be found than at present, when the public have shown a disposition to take the matter up in a right spirit.

THE LATE KUKA RISING.

The Friend of India quotes the following from a private letter:—"I observe in your last issue of the Friend of India that you censure Mr. Cowan for his action with reference to the Kukas. I should be very sorry if you prejudged his case, or raised a feeling against an officer who acted with vigour and promptitude at a time when less vigour and less promptitude might have launched us into a serious rebellion. There is ample evidence that the Kuka sect is fast spreading, and that the more turbulent of its members have for the past year determined to advance from the merely religious stage to one of political action. The butcher murders last year were undertaken with this object. This year has long been prophesied as one in which great events would occur. How far Ram Sing was the prime mover in this matter may well be doubted. But he had raised a power which he could not control, and his soubahs were determined to make use of his name and influence in order to further their own ambitious ends. It was arranged at the fair held in Ram Sing's village that a party of 100 desperate men should attack and seize the defenceless state of Kotela, and there get arms and horses for their followers. Now what do men mean when they start on such an expedition? Arms and horses? Not for midnight murders. Not for ordinary dacoities and plunder. It is known from the statements of the men themselves they were to attack, as they gathered strength, Nabha, Jheend, and Puttiala, and who can tell where would have been the end of the rebellion had they been successful in any one attack? The attack on Mulloudh was quite a thought by the way. It was not part of the plan. There was a report that arms and horses could be got there, so the attack was made. After that attack the position of the whole gang was no longer a matter of doubt to any one of the number. They had all joined in murder, and knew that they were going forth to commit more murder. They could then expect no mercy. Kotela is a native State, torn by dissensions and in a very defenceless state. The authorities there defended their palace and treasury well, and followed up the assailants for some distance, but had to return, fearing a second attack, which was threatened. Small bands of Kookas in twenty and thirty were reported to be assembling round Kotela, and it is in evidence that Kookhas were selling their lands and throwing away their property and hastening to join in some work of their Guru. Then the situation was grave, and clemency at such a moment was out of place; it would have been mistaken for weakness. It would be like firing blank cartridge. Napoleon's maxim was—Let your first round be with ball, after that fire blank cartridge, and such was the argument which dictated the proceedings of the local authorities. Those taken red-handed were sentenced to death. According to the constitution of these petty native States the sentence of death passed by the authorities can be put into execution on the sanction of the Commissioner, and considering the circumstances of the case, it would have been mistaken leniency to withhold sanction from the execution of men proved to have been part of the band who made the murderous attack on Kotela. But it is incorrect to suppose that the execution was indiscriminate. Besides those executed some were sentenced to transportation and some were merely detained without punishment."

THE LOSHAI EXPEDITION.

LEFT COLUMN, CAMP No. 10, Jan. 28.—Long before this reaches you, the telegraph will have given you information of a smart little affair which took place on the 25th instant, at a spot between Camp No. 11½ and the village of Noong-Loom, the first of Poiboi's villages which has yet been reached, and situated at an elevation of 5,500 feet. I regret my inability to indicate the position more clearly, but the maps supplied to commanding officers before the expedition (in imitation of the Prussian system in the last great war) terminate just at the point where they were likely to be useful, and our march to the east has been conducted with such dispatch as to take us clean outside the limits of all known geography. On the 22nd the General left Camp No. 10 or Chifui, and, after three very difficult and tedious marches, reached a spot to the S.E. of this, which was distinguished by the number 11½. Here information was received by the civil authorities that the Loshais, said to be under the leadership of Lalboora and Poiboi in person, meant to oppose the further advance of the column. On the morning of the 25th, at about 8 A.M., the force marched out of camp. The General, with a wing of the 44th under Colonel Nuttall, two guns of the Peshawur Mountain Battery under Captain Blackwood, and a detachment of the 22nd under Lieutenant Hare, had advanced about half-a-mile, and the baggage and coolies were still tailing out of camp when firing commenced. The Loshais had chosen their ground well, and were posted in force in dense jungle, well adapted for a display of their peculiar tactics, a large number of them being ensconced behind bushes and rocks in the bed of a small stream on the right flank of the advance party, whom they received with a volley. A little skirmishing took place, when the Gurkhas of the 44th went in at them in splendid style, killing fourteen or fifteen, but not without some loss—three Gurkhas being killed and one wounded. A party of the enemy thereupon doubled back through the jungle with the intention of falling upon the coolies and baggage in rear—an attempt which was frustrated by Captain Blackwood and the supporting party of the 22nd—two of the gunners being severely wounded. In the meantime the advance pushed on up the hill, driving the enemy before them, turning two strong stockades or barricades constructed across the road, and rushing finally into the village, which was situated at the edge of a very high hill and strongly stockaded. The Loshais made a feeble attempt to defend it, and then bolted. The General was slightly wounded on the left arm and hand. Our loss was as follows:—Artillery, two wounded severely; 44th, three killed, one wounded severely; frontier police, one wounded severely; in addition one coolie was killed and three wounded. The enemy's loss must have been severe, as fourteen dead bodies were counted, besides those which they may have succeeded in dragging away, according to their usual custom. Two of the bodies were minus their heads, which the Loshais had cut off and carried away to prevent the trophies falling into our hands. These must have been chiefs. This is the most determined stand which the Loshais have yet made; and the General, in a Brigade order, dated 26th, congratulates the force on the success of the day. The succeeding day, 26th, Colonel Roberts, V.C., with 50 men of the 22nd and 44th respectively; and Captain Blackwood, with two guns carried by coolies, went out to Kai-Toom, a large stockaded village of 150 houses situated in an easterly direction. It was determined to turn the position, and the party had a weary trudge of it. At about 5 P.M. a spot was reached on a level with the village at a distance of about 1,200 yards. A crowd of the enemy could be plainly seen in the middle of the village, and the guns were quickly brought into action. Three rounds were fired with common shell, the second of which burst beautifully in the midst of the Loshais, who fled in every direction; the third shot completing their discomfiture. This is the first time that artillery has been used in these hills, and the moral effect of this pyrotechnic display must be very great. The guns having had their say, the little Gurkhas, supported by the 22nd, went in at the stockade, the Loshais bolting out at one side as our troops climbed in at the other. Little time was left to examine the place, as the sun had long set. Torches were soon ready; and as the moon like a ball of fire rose slowly behind a lofty peak in the far-off misty hills, a rival sheet of flame shot up suddenly into the sky, lighting up the country for miles, and proclaiming to the blood-thirsty savages in the distant hills around that neither the deuse-

of the jungles nor the inaccessibility of their mountain fastnesses could save them from the punishment which they had richly earned through long years of successful cruelty and lust. This little illumination over, the party returned to camp, which they reached at about 10.30 P.M., thoroughly tired out, especially the artillery, who had worked hard all day, relieving the coolies in the carriage of the guns and ammunition. The day before they had been out from 6 A.M. till 8 P.M., bivouacking at night without fire or water, and only getting into camp the next morning. It has been determined in future to use coolie carriage exclusively for the guns, and the elephants are to be returned to the Commissariat to be utilised in the conveyance of stores between intermediate stations in rear. I forgot to mention that in the advance on the village five Loshais were taken prisoners, three of whom turned out to be men employed on our side, and who had probably gone to warn their countrymen of our intended attack. Three dead bodies were found in the village. On the day of the fight it was noticed in the camps in rear as far back as No. 7, that the Loshais, who were in the habit of coming in in large numbers to trade, had all disappeared, and they are only just beginning to show themselves again. They seem in great fear that we should retaliate on those villages which are in the neighbourhood of our stations; and the Kholei people aver that, anticipating such a result, they have killed all their remaining live stock, philosophically preferring one good feast and shorter commons afterwards to letting their fowls and other delicacies go to feed the invaders. While on this subject, and in refutation of the charges recklessly preferred in the newspapers regarding the wanton destruction of the whole grain of the country, I will quote a late Brigade Order to the effect that "as long as convoys are not attacked, villages in rear are not to be harried." The Loshais are well aware of this, and the Kholei men have already applied for leave to recommence their suspended ghoom operations. If after this they deliberately attack our parties, they have only themselves to thank for the consequences. Much indignation has been felt here at the comments made by half-informed prints on the conduct of the military operations. One Calcutta paper in particular, which has always set itself up as the organ of the planting interest, after persistently howling for war and dolefully whining about the defenceless state of our N.E. frontier, has not been ashamed to turn round and abuse the commanders for punishing the poisonous vermin in the only possible way. I would suggest that the writer of the article be sent into the Loshai country armed with the whole armour of faith and a bagful of tracts. The troops might then be withdrawn.—Pioneer Correspondent.

RIGHT COLUMN, Jan. 30.—Of course you have heard that a few days ago Rowa and another of Sukpilall's mantries came down to Jalnabhera and brought with them the wife of the Alexandrapur Khansama and a Kachari coolie, who had been carried off last year. They said Mary Winchester was with Sukpilall, and that he would give her up if a boat were sent for her. The surrender of the child will lighten the task of the generals, who will now be able to devote themselves solely to punishing the tribes who have been in the habit of raiding. The day after the fight with Poipoi's and Lalburah's men, in which the wing of the 44th under Colonel Nuthall distinguished themselves for the brilliant manner in which they fought, a small body of infantry and half the Peshawar Mountain Battery, the whole being under the command of Colonel Roberts, attacked and drove the enemy out of the village into which they had retired after the fight of the previous day. The artillery opened fire at 1,200 yards, and made splendid practice, the second shell bursting in the middle of the village. The troops had an excessively hard day's work, and did not return to camp till late at night. The village was situated at an elevation of about 6,000 feet, and the road up to it was excessively precipitous. The same day another party returned to the scene of the fight of the 25th to burn our dead, who had been but hurriedly buried, and also those of the enemy. The force at head-quarters is now halting for a few days to enable supplies to be pushed on, and the strain on the Commissariat is excessive, as the furthest camp is now sixty miles from Tipai Mukh. The Commissariat officers are indefatigable in their endeavours to keep things straight, but stores cannot be sent on without transport, and both elephants and coolies are breaking down daily from overwork. Sicknees is increasing, and the deaths are becoming more frequent. Cholera is also, I am sorry to say, hovering about the line of march, and there have been fatal cases at No. 4 station, in a batch of sick who had been sent back to Cachar, and also in one of the forward camps.

The unvarying diet and constant use of tinned provisions has greatly affected the health of the Europeans, nearly all of whom have suffered from bowel-complaint. Fresh beef, poor in quality, but nevertheless very acceptable, is now issued twice a week, and I believe we are to have it oftener. The weather for the last week has been unsettled, and we have been expecting rain daily. According to Government orders, the two columns should reach their respective bases by the end of the first week in March, so that there is still a clear three weeks or month for us to remain in the Loshai country. If the rains hold off till then, all will go well; but if they commence earlier than usual, look out for squalls, as a tremendous increase in the mortality will occur; and if the Loshais, in revenge for their losses, keep harassing our rear and flanks in any force, as it is not impossible they may do, the return march will be accompanied with far greater difficulties than the advance.

The General's wounds are doing well.

An officer writing from the Chittagong Column of the Loshai Expeditionary Force, dated Camp "Lal Schumah," January 15, says:—

"It is intensely hot here—the sun almost as hot as in April in Calcutta. Our marching has been most unpleasant, the ascents and descents being so excessively steep. The greater number of our first marches were through water from end to end, with the slight exception of here and there having a small hill to go over. This I found after a short experience got so slippery from so many men with wet feet going up and down, that I ordered my men to keep to the stream, and though some of the reaches were 50 and 100 yards longer than the path over the hill, I got round in half the time. It is the hardest work I have experienced, though I have been a good deal in higher hills than these."—Englishman Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

SAPPERS AND MINERS.—A committee, of which Colonel Thesiger is president, is at present sitting to report upon the organisation of the Sappers and Miners.

CROPS IN THE CENTRAL PROVINCES.—The rabi crops in the Central Provinces have suffered from the cloudy weather, and those in Oudh have been injured by rain and hail, but those of Bengal have improved in consequence of seasonable rain.

COTTON IN THE PUNJAB.—The extent of land under cotton in the Punjab last season was 706,906 acres as compared with 811,749 acres in the previous year. The average selling price was Rs. 17-1-10 per maund.

GWALIOR.—Maharaja Sindia will assemble at his camp of exercise two troops of horse artillery, three light field batteries, two 18-pounders drawn by elephants, three regiments of cavalry, and four of infantry.

A GOOD YIELD OF COTTON.—We hear from Umballa that the best field of cotton put under cultivation by Mr. Login has yielded at the rate of 500 lbs. of clean cotton, or about seven times the average of India. This result is very satisfactory.—Delhi Gazette.

THE LAHORE POLICE.—Captain Menzies, District Superintendent of Police, Lahore, has just completed a searching inquiry into the conduct of the Loodiana police during the past year. Some changes in the composition of the force have already taken place, and others are contemplated.—Indian Public Opinion.

ACCIDENT TO LIEUT. TURNBULL.—Lieut. S. D. Turnbull, Adjutant of the 15th Bengal Cavalry, met with a bad fall while riding in the steeplechase at Delhi on Friday, Feb. 9. It was thought he had received a concussion of the brain. When our telegram was despatched, however, he was doing well.—Pioneer.

PUNJAB RAILWAY.—We hear that immense reductions have been ordered in the upper branches of the Punjab Railway service. These have caused quite a consternation among the officials. We hope that they will not think of organising a general strike.—Indian Public Opinion.

MOOLTAN.—We gather from a private letter from Mooltan that the wheat crop in that district promises to be an extraordinarily good one. The unusual flooding of the Ravee has resulted in upwards of twenty-five thousand beegahs of Government waste land being brought under the plough for wheat cultivation. Beyond colds and a moderate amount of fever, the health of the station is reported to be good.—Indian Abuses.

EXPULSION OF KUKAS FROM NATIVE SIKH STATES.—In order, we suppose, to prove their loyalty, the native States of Putteala, Jheend, and Nabha have resorted to the singular expedient of expelling all the followers of Ram Singh from their respective territories. The Kukas, when clothed and in their right mind, are for the most part industrious artisans; and it is to be hoped that the Government of India will step in to prevent their being hunted down as criminals. They must live somewhere; and in India, more perhaps than in any other country in the world, men are usually on their best behaviour in their own native village. We trust that a calm and earnest enquiry into the alleged grievances of these people will follow the present disturbances.

ITEMS FROM OUDH.—We find from the Administration Report of the Province of Oudh for 1870-71, just issued, that during the year there were killed 367 male and 60 female wolves, 506 male cubs, and 374 female cubs; 21 hyenas, 2 leopards, 2,153 dogs, 1 tiger and 167 snakes. The number of snakes has fallen off, owing to the withdrawal of the reward, from 5,625, the number killed in the previous year. The amount paid in 1870-71, in rewards, was Rs. 3,109; in the previous year it was Rs. 6,709. In the prison returns we find that there were executed during the year 27 males and 2 females. Of a convict population of 16,878 there were 9 Christians, 3,152 Mahomedans, 13,317 Hindoos, all other classes 14. The number of persons whipped in Oudh during the year was 2,696, about 1,000 less than in the previous year.

SONA SULPHUR BATHS.—Some native soldiers left in hospital at the camp at Delhi are to be sent to the sulphur baths of Sona to try the effects of the baths.

MILITARY.—Major-General Sir George Malcolm, K.C.B., and Staff, returned to Mhow on the 3rd February from a tour of inspection, in which Nusseerabad and Neemuch were included. H.M.'s 59th Regiment had arrived at Nusseerabad and relieved the 8th Foot, which left for Cawnpore, via Agra, on the 29th ult.—Deccan Herald.

STORMS AT MUSSOORIE.—Jan. 23.—Last night an appalling storm raged over the place almost up to daylight this morning—vivid flashes of lightning and deafening peals of thunder, and hailstones of an extraordinary size, fully as large as pigeons' eggs. Some of them perforated the thatches of native huts, causing no small consternation to the inmates. I am told cattle exposed to the storm were killed outright; the whole place is enveloped in fog, similar to a day in the rains, with a stiff gale blowing. Our friends in the Dhoon, judging from the flow of sunshine over them, appear to be basking in its rays, whilst we mortals up hill are perishing in the cold. The variation in temperature the last three days has been most variable. No one can deny the severity of season 1871-72.—Delhi Gazette Correspondent, Jan. 29.

HAILSTORM AT MEERUT.—Meerut was visited on Wednesday afternoon by a terrific thunderstorm, with a deluge of rain, and hail of a size which the oldest inhabitant does not remember having seen in the Meerut district. The delicate blossoms adorning peach-trees and other fruit trees were destroyed instantly. Thus, as the hailstorm increased, slender branches were broken by thousands. There can be no doubt but the crops have been most seriously injured. On Thursday at noon, after an interval of seventeen or eighteen hours, masses of hailstones, from six inches to a foot in depth, remained as solid ice in sheltered spots. Some of the hailstones were as large as a small orange. Such lightning as blazed from four to nine o'clock P.M. is very rarely seen. We may expect to hear of much damage to gardens, fields, walls, and buildings. Meerut mail was like a river. Many compounds were like tanks. Boats might have floated from wall to wall.—Delhi Gazette, Jan. 27.

CENTRAL PROVINCES.—The Administration report of the Central Provinces for the year 1871 shows that the punishment of whipping was inflicted on 3,194 persons. In all, 26,055 were convicted by the Courts, but only 6,104 were sentenced to imprisonment. The total fines amounted to Rs. 1,19,885, or an average of Rs. 6-15-11 on each of 17,103 persons. Compared with the previous year the Imperial revenue from this province has increased by more than seven lacs of rupees, and the local income by a little more than a lac. To the Imperial income, however, must be added the produce of the Pandhri tax, which shows a nominal increase of Rs. 1,54,000. This tax has been more productive during the present year than in any previous one. The cash balance on the 1st March, 1871, stood at Rs. 73,21,000, or nearly fifteen lacs higher than the balance in the previous year.

THE DURAND MEMORIAL.—The committee for the Henry Durand Memorial have published a complete list of subscriptions, amounting in all to about £2,100, and comprising amounts from a number of native nobles and gentlemen. We are sorry to find that few of the subscriptions are from the Madras and Bombay Presidencies, which might have been expected to contribute a fair share towards the Memorial to so noble and distinguished a soldier. There is still time, however, for contributions. The proposal is to have a full length portrait of Sir Henry Durand, painted by some eminent artist, and placed either in the Town Hall, Calcutta, or in the Montgomery Hall, Lahore, and the Committee seems to lean to the latter as belonging to the Punjab "with which the death of Sir Henry will always be associated." Assuming that £200 are spent in this way, the committee suggest (subject of course, in both cases, to the wish of the subscribers) that the remainder should be handed over in perpetuity to the Governors of the Wellington College to establish a Durand Foundation, or Scholarship, to be held by the sons of deceased Indian officers, and this proposal has the support of the family of Sir Henry Durand.—Friend of India.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Feb. 9.—Our market during the past week has been fairly active, and a considerable quantity of goods and yarns has changed hands at still advancing prices. It is to be noted, however, that a considerable proportion of the transactions has been speculative.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Feb. 9.—Jute: The demand for all the finer qualities has continued active, and prices have again risen; lower quotations have, however, declined. Saltpetre has also advanced, chiefly from speculative purchases. Rice: Fine table sorts have risen nearly four annas; Ballam is not in much demand, and has fallen fully two annas, the stocks in the market being very heavy. Linseed: Owing to the small supplies on hand, shippers have had to submit to a considerable rise. Raw Silk: A slightly improved business has been done this week, but prices have not risen. Coraha: Again a few pieces have been shipped at former rates—say, Rs. 155 to 160 for the best qualities.

CIVIL.—Mr. R. S. Ellis, the Chief Secretary, takes six months' leave to Europe, shortly, with the double object of seeking to secure health and a seat in the Council of Fort St. George. Mr. W. Robinson also goes home to urge his claims to the seat to be rendered vacant by Mr. Arbuthnot's retirement next October, and the "running" between that gentleman and Mr. Ellis is likely to be pretty close.

NEWS FROM MANDALAY.—A correspondent of the Indian Daily News at Mandalay mentions the outbreak of disturbances in the frontier districts of Upper Burmah. Great preparations are being actively made for the despatch of troops to Theinee, and the King is said to have received a large body of them lately. His Majesty, it is stated, is very anxious to arm his soldiers with rifles and obtain rifled cannon, the attempt to manufacture such in Mandalay having proved a failure.

THE DISTRESS IN GANJAM.—We are gratified in being able still to report the continued abatement of the distress in the Ganjam district. The relief works have proved most useful in reducing to a minimum the effects of the drought. Other relief works are contemplated by which still further assistance will be afforded to the people, and it is hoped that the worst period of the scarcity has been passed and that the people may now look forward to a return to plenty and prosperity. Rain, however, which still keeps off, is much needed, and until it comes, and that in abundance too, the hope of an entire cessation of the famine and a return of plenty is without substantial foundation. It is rain that is wanted to restore the district to prosperity.—Athenaeum.

PETROLEUM IN BURMAH.—The petroleum wells of Burmah promise after all to become a success. Even at the depths at which the shafts are at present sunk, the yield covers the working expenses; but the native workmen accustomed to those operations declare that no true spring has yet been struck, and that the oil at present obtained is only that which has trickled in from cracks of the rocks through which the boring passed. When "ile" is really "struck," they say that it wells up with a simmering sound; and that it will be struck if the shaft is only carried on to thrice the present depth they do not doubt.

MILITARY.—The head quarters and a wing of H.M.'s 2-21st Fusiliers, consisting of thirteen officers, 374 men, thirty-nine women, eighty-four children and sixty-one followers, arrived at Madras on the evening of Feb. 4, landed the next morning, and proceeded at once to the fort.—The head quarters of H.M.'s 45th Regiment or "Sherwood Foresters" embarked on the morning of the 9th, for Rangoon.—We learn that Lieutenant Sturt, an officer attached to the 28th Regiment, Madras Native Infantry, whose trial by court-martial took place on the 30th October last, and of which we made mention at the time, has been found guilty of the charges preferred against him and has been sentenced to be cashiered by the court, which sentence has been approved and confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief, Lord Napier of Magdala.

THE LOAFER NUISANCE.—Five more "vagrants" or "loafers" are about to be deported from Madras, Government having sanctioned the disbursement of the necessary funds for the purpose. Since the practice of every now and then sending these "ne'er to do well" people away the vagrant nuisance in Madras has considerably lessened. To remove the nuisance altogether, however, appears to be a hopeless task. No sooner has one lot been got rid of than another seems to be gathering from different parts, thus rendering it necessary, every now and then, for Government to make a grant of funds for shipping them off from Madras. In Bombay the nuisance is much greater than it is in Madras from the fact, probably, that Bombay is looked upon as a better place for embarkation than Madras, or where better success to obtain employment may attend the vagrant's endeavours to get something to do by which he may earn an honest living. Bombay is therefore a favourite centre for the congregation of these people.—Athenæum.

A POSTAL GRIEVANCE.—Madras is again "sat upon" in the most decided fashion. The mail steamer arrived in Bombay harbour at ten o'clock on Thursday morning, and yet the mail train for Madras was allowed to start at eleven o'clock without the mails. Of course, as it is "only" Madras that suffers, the postal authorities do not require to mind. They would take particular care to send off the Bengal mails by special train. This treatment is perfectly disgraceful, and the local Government, if it is a government, and not a mere agency, will take care to let the Supreme Government hear plenty about it. The difference between a letter arriving on Saturday and on Sunday morning makes a week's difference in our opportunities for replying to it, and the wanton infliction of such an injury on Madras is a matter calling for the most serious notice. We hope the Chamber of Commerce will take the matter up, and that the public will warmly support them in urging the local Government to demand fair play for Madras.—Madras Times.

YOUTHFUL LOAFERS.—From a case that was tried by Mr. T. G. Clarke at the Town Police Court on Thursday last it appears that there is a nuisance and a danger growing up in our midst. Two European lads were charged with trespass, and it appeared that they had frequently been up before the Court. One of them had only been out of prison three days. They were described in the charge sheet as having no residences, and the evidence showed that they had no means of gaining a livelihood. It was pointed out to the magistrate by the Deputy Commissioner of Police that there are many youths in this town similarly situated. We quite believe this; for they are constantly to be seen loafing about. Now, what is to be done with these youths? We cannot let the nuisance go on increasing, for if we do, there may be some terrible crime committed some day or other by them. We may depend upon it that they will not starve if it is possible to obtain anything by stealing. They mix with the lowest natives and pick up all their vices, while at the same time they have all the strength and courage of the European. As soon as they get out of prison they do something to get in again. It is very difficult to know what to do with them; but something ought to be done, and that speedily.—Madras Times, Feb. 10.

SLAVERY IN NATIVE COCHIN.—Are people allowed to traffic in human flesh and blood in Native Cochin? This is a question which we ask in all seriousness, as, from certain events which have recently occurred in Trichoor, it would appear that slavery is as cherished an institution now as it was in the olden time. Perhaps the buying and selling of slaves is not done openly, but that transactions of this nature occur pretty frequently, those who have lived in the interior for some time, and have kept their eyes and ears open, will be unable to deny. The slaves, who are the most abject creatures imaginable, seem perfectly reconciled to their lot, and, unless subjected to severe ill-treatment, they seldom leave their masters. Europeans who have settled in the interior have done a great deal of good towards improving the condition of this poor down-trodden class but unfortunately their efforts are seldom seconded by the authorities.

Here is a case in point. A slave whom his owners ill-treated ran away from them, and sought the protection of a gentleman living at Trichoor. The owners, desirous of having the man restored to them, several times sent offers of money, which were stoutly refused. They then tried to win over the neighbours, with the view of inducing them to inveigle away the runaway, but without success. Lately a man, who formerly belonged to the mission, but had been excommunicated for some offence, knowing that the family were away, procured the assistance of a Chogan and a gang of about fifteen Nairs, and broke into the house at night and carried away the slave by force, taking care to get the man servant left in charge intoxicated in the early part of the evening. The gentleman on his return laid a formal complaint before the Tahsildar, who after two or three days' delay had two of the men arrested. It is rumoured that a warrant has been issued for the apprehension of the owners, but as they are influential men, it is feared that there will be a miscarriage of justice. Housebreaking and kidnapping are certainly not light offences, but the Tahsildar evidently is of a different opinion; otherwise, how are we to account for the lukewarm manner in which he conducts this inquiry. The correspondent who has communicated to us these facts desires us to draw the attention of the Dewan thereto. He writes:—"If you draw the Dewan's attention to the case, he will be strict in his orders, or I fear they will get round him. Is not slavery abolished? then why does the Sircar wink at such things? To this day, as I can prove, people buy and sell human lives. Unless the press takes up the cause of these poor slaves their lot will indeed be hard. "He is only a slave! is the only remark we hear; such being the case, is it not hard to prosecute the owner for taking what is his!!!" We hope to return to the subject in our next.—Cochin Argus.

KHELAT.—It is reported that a regiment of Sind Horse and a mortar battery are to be sent to Khelat to the assistance of the Khan.

MR. I. T. PRICHARD ON INDIAN POLITY.—Mr. Iltidus T. Prichard has written to the President of the Bombay Association, expressing great pleasure at the receipt of the letter conveying to him the resolutions passed by the Association thanking him for his exertions in drawing attention in England to the defects in the financial and general administration of British India; and takes the opportunity to impress upon the Bombay Association that the leaders of thought and opinion in India ought not to rest till they have secured a fair representation of their country in Parliament. A little attention to the constitution of Great Britain, he says, will show that not only is there nothing unconstitutional or impractical in such a measure, but that it is a right which the people of India, as a component part of the British Empire, are entitled to demand, and this right to representation appears to him to be so dear, that if it were firmly and persistently demanded, it must eventually be conceded. The demand should, he considers, be at first limited to one representative from each minor presidency and lieutenant-governorship, the suffrage being extended to holders in their own right of landed and other property. "In looking forward to the probable future destiny of India by the light which the history of other nations affords," Mr. Prichard says, "we can see but two alternatives. Either as time goes on the races of India, growing in intelligence and enlightenment and gradually merging their race distinctions in a principle of nationality, will become welded into one great people, will recognise their political rights, and proceed to claim them by separating from Great Britain, or the union between India and England must be made permanent by the actual incorporation of the former with the British Empire. That the interests of India will be best consulted by the latter course there can be no doubt. But there is only one way of effecting it, and that is by India being represented in Parliament. That our leading statesmen will one day become convinced of this I feel sure, though at first much opposition must be looked for; but if the people of India are in earnest, that opposition must eventually yield to a demand grounded on truth, justice, and right, and it is to this object that the efforts of all who labour for the real welfare of the people of India should be directed."

THE KING OF SIAM AT BOMBAY.—After visiting the camp at Delhi, Agra, Cawnpore, and Jubbulpore, his Majesty the King of Siam arrived in Bombay on Friday morning. He was received at the station by the Commander-in-Chief, and then conducted, with a military escort, to Government House, where he was entertained by his Excellency the Governor. A number of gentlemen were presented to him, and he then left for his bungalow at Malabar Hill, where he was visited on Saturday by his Excellency the Governor. In the evening he was entertained at a State dinner in Government House. Tuesday he will attend the ball to be given by his Excellency, and on Thursday he will attend the ball to be given by the Hon. Mr. A. D. Sassoon. It is intended that his Majesty shall visit the dockyard, the Caves of Elephanta, cotton mills in the neighbourhood of Bombay, and other places of interest, during the week, and he will leave for Madras on Saturday. The young king, who is accompanied by Major Sladen, and Mr. Knox, the Consul-General at Bangkok, who acts as interpreter, has made a favourable impression, and has given reason for supposing that he will turn-out one of the most intelligent and liberal monarchs of the East. He is very young looking, and is not at all uncomely, his figure being good, and his face open and intelligent, and not of a very decided Mongolian cast. He talks English pretty well, an accomplishment he owes to his father, who, during the twenty-five years he spent in a Buddhist monastery, in order to escape from the intrigues of a half-brother, managed to store his mind with many treasures of science and Western civilization. He is said to observe well what he sees, and to draw comparisons between his own country and the improvements his visit to India has given him an opportunity of considering. For an Oriental King he is very modestly attended, having not more than a retinue of forty. He has brought with him six brothers, two or three ministers, four nobles of Siam, sixteen officers, and eighteen personal attendants; and although at home his Majesty is "very much married," he has not a single lady in his train.

MISS CARPENTER AND THE HINDUS.—BOMBAY, Jan. 20.—Miss Carpenter seems now to be discovering what some of us, who knew more of the country than she did at the time of her visit to India, had been long aware of—that among Hindus acquiescence does not necessarily imply conviction, and that they, in common with the rest of the world, find it rather more blessed to receive than to give. The Hindu girls' school in Girgaum has been entirely supported by Miss Carpenter for two years, and she now very naturally concludes that the parents, whose daughters are being educated in this school, should contribute something to its support. Up to this time they do not appear to have felt the necessity for this, nor, so long as the advantages of the school are to be obtained without payment, are they likely to do so. Miss Carpenter is willing to defray half the expenses for another year if the parents will do the rest—an offer so liberal and demand so modest that one can hardly conceive of their terms not being complied with and accepted with eagerness. My own decided impression is that at present very few Hindus, even of respectable means, care enough about their daughters' education to pay for it, even at the low rate of one rupee per mensem; and that they will be loth to touch the burden with one of their fingers, so long as philanthropic shoulders can be found willing to bear the whole weight of it. May I confess without utter condemnation as obstructive, illiberal, and benighted or poco-curant, that it appears to me there are more urgent reforms and improvements shrieking for attention both in England and in this country than the literary cultivation of the already amiable and excellent housewives of India? Now I am acquainted with several highly cultivated and carefully educated ladies with whom to converse is a feast—nay, a keen combat of reason—but who are neither amiable, excellent, nor housewifely. These educational maniacs would have us forget the fact that the three feminine virtues mentioned flourish or fade, absolutely uninfluenced by the little more or little less of book lore. Whether these virtues include the whole duty of woman is another question; but I and several Hindus rather prize them.—Times of India Correspondent.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, Feb. 12.—The continued excitement in the Cotton market has at length had some effect on Grey Goods, and in most instances we have to advance our quotations As. 1 to 2 pence on last mail's prices; the demand, however, is still very moderate. The dullness in the Calcutta market, too, which is reported as much over supplied, has also an unfavourable influence with us, so that, altogether, importers of Piece Goods have anything but cheering prospects before them. Twist in limited supply, and quotations show a further advance of As. 1 to 1 1/2 per lb. In Metals, there has been a shade more doing, and prices are the turn in sellers' favour.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, Feb. 12.—Cotton: On the 9th inst. the home telegram advised that Cotton was quieter, with a downward tendency, which has induced buyers here to keep almost entirely out of the market, and prices close quite Rs. 5 to 7 below the highest point touched, the advance on the week being only about Rs. 5 per candy.

MONEY MARKET.—BOMBAY, Feb. 12.—EXCHANGE: Our quotations are higher by 3d. to 1d. per cent. for the week. With Calcutta there has not been so much business doing. The rate on China for 60 days' sight House Bills is nominally Rs. 216 per 100 dollars.

NAPIER OF MAGDALA, General,
Commander in Chief in India.

Headquarters, Camp Delhi, Jan. 17, 1872.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

LORD NAPIER ON THE CAMP OF EXERCISE.

Headquarters, Camp, Delhi, Feb. 2.—1. The experiences gained in war pass away with the actors in the scene, and are forgotten in a long peace.

2. The camp of exercise at Delhi has given us an opportunity, during the last two months, of renewing the lessons of war modified by the teaching of the present day.

3. The C. in C. feels assured that very great benefit has resulted from the Camp of Exercise, and that all engaged in it will return to the study of their profession with increased interest and capability.

4. It must be remembered that camps of exercise are not intended to teach the elementary instruction which should be learnt in cantonments, and the C. in C. would earnestly engage all officers holding high commands in the numerous garrisons in this Presidency to cause the chain of practical instruction in field exercises to be carried through all grades, so that each officer, of whatever rank, shall be competent to teach, and be held responsible for the training of those who are especially under his command.

5. His Excellency is also desirous to see officers exercised as often as possible in grades of superior responsibility to their own.

6. If this course is steadily pursued, the labours of command will be comparatively easy.

7. Lord Napier of Magdala has not failed to observe instances of special zeal and ability in exercising command and in imparting instruction; his Excellency requests the generals of divisions and the heads of departments to submit the names of any officers whom they consider to have distinguished themselves by intelligence, and to merit being brought to the C. in C.'s notice.

8. The time for breaking up the Camp of Exercise having arrived, Lord Napier of Magdala desires to express to the officers commanding divisions, brigades, and regiments, to the umpire staff, and to the several departmental officers, his best thanks for the zealous assistance they have given in working out the objects of the camp, and the endeavours they have made to render it instructive.

9. His Excellency has been highly gratified by the excellent discipline of the troops, both European and native, and the zeal and soldierly spirit with which they have entered into the operations in which they have been engaged.

10. Lord Napier of Magdala is greatly indebted to the Adjutant-general's and Quartermaster-general's Departments.

11. Compilations from the best military authors have been prepared and circulated.

12. The theatre of operation has been rapidly surveyed, and maps freely distributed.

13. The difficult duties of the Commissariat Department have been efficiently fulfilled.

14. The medical and sanitary arrangements have been in every respect satisfactory.

15. The Provost Marshal's duties have been carried on in a very creditable manner.

16. The observations of the Commander-in-Chief on the several operations will be communicated hereafter.—By order, &c.,

FRED. THESIGER, Colonel, Adjt.-gen.

Official Papers.

REDUCTION OF THE NATIVE INDIAN ARMY.

The following official papers have been published in India :—
From the Secretary of State for India to the Governor General of India in Council, March 2, 1871.

My Lord—Your Excellency's despatch of Oct. 3, 1870, No. 285, with the minutes of the members of your Government which it encloses, seems to require that I should now review the circumstances under which this discussion has arisen in respect to a reduction of the Native Army.

2. Towards the close of the year 1868, when I received the seals of the India Office, there was no reason to believe that the Government of India contemplated or was prepared to sanction any reduction whatever of force in the Native Army. On the contrary, the latest expression of opinion which had been received from that Government was to the effect that any such reduction would be impolitic. This opinion had received the sanction and authority of Sir John Lawrence, then Viceroy, and of Sir W. Mansfield, then Commander in Chief.

3. When, therefore, early in 1869, it became my duty to consider carefully the state of Indian finance, and when I found that in recent years, although the army had not been increased at all, the expenditure upon it had been increased very largely, I determined to call your Lordship's attention to this important fact, and to direct a close investigation into the question whether, without any sacrifice of force, there might not be effected great economy in cost.

4. It was with this view, and in this sense, that I addressed to your Lordship my financial despatch, No. 52, of the 26th January, 1869. In that despatch I reviewed the large increase which had arisen in various branches of the military expenditure since the year 1862-63, when, after the Mutiny, the army had been reduced to its peace footing, and when the total expenditure upon it had been brought down to thirteen millions, I pointed out that since that year, although there had been no additions made to the strength of the army, the expenditure upon it had risen to sixteen millions; and after specifying, as far as I could, the branches of expenditure on which this great increase had arisen, I expressed a sanguine hope that a close investigation of its causes would enable you not only to arrest it, but to effect a great reduction in the total cost of the army without any sacrifice of strength or of efficiency.

5. I desire to direct your Lordship's special attention to the fact that there was not a word in that despatch which contemplated any reduction in the strength of the army, or placed the Government of India under any pressure to make such a reduction in order to effect the contemplated saving. That saving was hoped for as the probable result of more economical management, and not of any diminution of force.

6. I direct your Lordship's attention to this fact, because in your minute of Oct. 3, 1870, enclosed in the despatch now under reply, you seem to regard it as inconsistent on my part that I should have expected, and almost directed, large reductions of military expenditure, and yet that I should have entertained objections to the measures of reduction subsequently proposed by you. It is sufficient for me now to observe that the questions of policy, which are involved in reductions of the strength of the army, and especially in particular modes affecting such reductions are wholly different from any questions involved in merely administrative economy or reform. It is, indeed, quite possible that the reductions in cost which I thought attainable, were in reality not attainable by mere economy of administration. In that case your Excellency's Government were free to review the opinion formerly entertained that the army could not safely be reduced in strength, and were free also, as the result of that consideration, to make proposals involving such reduction to her Majesty's Government. But your Lordship will readily see that this proposal was a new one, different from that which I had contemplated in the despatch of January, 1869, and one which, in perfect consistency with that despatch, might either be questioned or declined upon its own merits, and with reference to the many difficult and delicate questions which it raised.

7. It was under pressure, I believe, not of my despatch of January, 1869, but of the increased financial difficulties which appeared in the autumn of that year, that your Lordship did reconsider and abandon the opinion which in 1868 had been entertained by the Government of India in respect to the impolicy of reducing the strength of the army. The result was a series of proposals involving reductions of strength both in the European and the native forces.

8. Although some doubt must always attach to opinions somewhat suddenly formed, yet the actual experience of financial embarrassment, and a nearer view of the political dangers involved in excessive military expenditure, are compelling motives of the most legitimate kind, and may well induce any Government to look with fresh eyes upon its present position and upon its future course.

9. It was, therefore, a real satisfaction to her Majesty's Government to find that you had arrived at the conclusion that the risks and dangers likely to arise out of the existing scale of expenditure were more to be dreaded than any danger to be anticipated from even a considerable reduction in military force. I assented in the main to the proposals you made in respect to the European army, and also in respect to the total amount of reduction in the native army, although for reasons fully stated in my despatch of 27th January, 1870, I questioned the wisdom of the mode in which you proposed to carry that reduction into effect, and suggested some alternative methods as more expedient.

10. One principal objection which I entertained to your proposal had reference to the severity with which your contemplated reductions were to fall on the army of Madras, as compared with the armies of Bengal and Bombay.

11. I regret that, in reviewing this part of the discussion, I am compelled to notice certain expressions used by Major general Norman in his minute forwarded in the despatch now under reply. I neither expect nor desire that officers of the Indian army should wholly divest themselves of that personal feeling towards the portion of the army with which they have served, which naturally and inevitably arises out of the condition of the service. It is a feeling honourable to them; and an officer so able and so distinguished as Major general Norman is not likely to allow it consciously to bias his judgment upon questions in respect to which such bias would be injurious. But, when Major general Norman, in allusion, apparently, to the arguments of my despatch of January, 1870, speaks of the army of Bengal being "taunted" with the mutiny of 1857, and again of that mutiny "being cast in the teeth" of the army of Bengal, he brings into the discussion language and feelings which cannot fail to embarrass free communication between her Majesty's Government and the Government of India, on the most difficult and delicate of all discussions connected with our Indian empire. I need hardly remind your Lordship that, although the Government at home lies under some disadvantage in the discussion of many Indian questions, and must often rely to a great extent on the matured judgment of the Government of India, it has at least one advantage, namely, that it is necessarily free from local feeling. It is impossible that her Majesty's Government should have any partiality towards any section of the army of India; and anything approaching to a taunt is entirely out of the question as coming from me in the discussion which is now under review.

12. But, since misapprehension seems to have arisen as to the general principle which dictated my objection to your proposal of October 4, 1869, No. 349, I take this opportunity of placing those principles more distinctly on record.

13. Although in past times there have been many occasions on which a spirit of mutiny and insubordination has appeared in particular regiments belonging to each and to all of the armies of India, the great mutiny of the Bengal army in 1857 was an event standing altogether by itself. Four great facts stand out in marked prominence among the events of 1857: first, that the mutiny did not arise, as local mutinies had frequently arisen before, from any grievance connected with the pay or privileges of the troops, but from the violent prejudices and passions connected with the institution of caste: second, that the spirit of mutiny was in the highest degree contagious, passing from man to man, and from regiment to regiment, and in spite often of every disadvantage of opportunity; third, that distinctions and differences of religion and of race, as between Hindoo and Mahomedan, were merged and lost, or gave way to the more powerful influence which identified the individual sepoy with the spirit and temper of his corps; fourth, that anything and everything which tended to separate or detach different portions of the army from each other was, in its measure and degree, an impediment to the progress of morbid feeling. To this cause, seconded by peculiarities of discipline and organisation, we owed the good conduct of the separate armies of Bombay and Madras, and the Punjab Frontier Force.

14. On the other hand it must never be forgotten that the great mutiny of 1857 was suppressed with the aid of native levies. The gallantry and fidelity of troops so raised were indeed conspicuous. It cannot be said, therefore, that any doubt was cast by the events of that year upon the power of the British Government to yoke the native races of India to its military service. For special work at least, and in times of action and excitement, the value of native troops received a new and splendid illustration. I do not for a moment forget the fact dwelt upon by General Norman, that many of the regiments now constituting the army of Bengal are corps which did excellent service in the suppression of the mutiny.

15. Nevertheless, the attitude of mind which the British Government must assume towards the native army of India can never be exactly what it was before the mutiny of 1857. That event revealed a risk which had never before been fully measured. It proved that, quite irrespective of any general discontent among the people, quite irrespective of any deliberate conspiracy among the troops, irrespective even of any practical grievance affecting their condition, there are permanent elements of danger in a large native army in India, arising out of fanaticisms and superstitions which have no parallel or counterpart in any other army in the world. Accordingly, when the mutiny had been suppressed, the Government of India gave its careful attention to the best means of maintaining the discipline and fidelity of the native army, under the conditions which prevail in times of tranquillity and peace. As a consequence of the consideration then given, great alterations were made in the organisation of the native army, and particularly in the composition of the regiments in the army of Bengal. The chief object of this change was, that there should be a more careful distribution of races and of castes than had formerly prevailed.

16. In General Norman's minute enclosed in the despatch under reply, he dwells on this change, and gives an analysis of the composition of the Bengal regiments, with reference to the caste, nationality, and religion of the sepoys.

17. Her Majesty's Government has every hope that this change is a wholesome one as far as it goes; but I cannot help observing that the old elements are still powerfully represented; and, above all, I must remind your Lordship that in 1857 the differences of caste and religion existing in a regiment were powerless against the common feeling and common passions which bound the men together as one corps.

18. My conclusion is that, however valuable the new organisation may be, and however much it may be hoped that it tends to neutralise the elements of danger, we must not trust to it alone, and that every other circumstance and precaution which were of proved value in 1857, or which in the nature of things must be of use in the same direction, should be carefully maintained and preserved.

19. Amongst these circumstances connected with the native army of India stands foremost the division of it into three separate armies, connected with different subordinate Governments, and more or less distinguished from each other by peculiarities of discipline and of race.

20. Of these armies the army of Madras is in many respects the most peculiar of all. It was also, as a matter of fact and from whatever causes, the most entirely free from the mutinous spirit of 1857. When, therefore, you proposed that of the total contemplated reduction in the native army, by far the largest part should fall on the army of Madras, I objected to that proposal, on the ground that the relative strength of the two armies of Madras and Bombay, as compared with the army of Bengal, would thereby be unduly reduced. I suggested as preferable an equal reduction in all so as to avoid this change in relative strength.

21. You have objected to this proposal on the ground, first, that the races from which the Madras army is recruited are physically inferior, and that a long period of peace has rendered them otherwise less efficient as fighting men; second, that the Madras regiments are more expensive when employed out of their own territory, from their carrying their families with them and from other circumstances; and, thirdly, that the Madras army is now admitted to be in excess of any requirement of its own Presidency.

22. With reference to the first of these objections, I must observe that, so far as I know, no recent events have effected the physical qualifications of the people from whom the Madras army is recruited. I must assume, therefore, that, so far as this is concerned, there has been no change since the times when Madras troops have been found most effective in the field. It is little more than one generation since Sir J. Malcolm said,* "Each of the three Presidencies of India has succeeded in attaining, though by different means, the object of having an effective native army. I have served with and commanded native troops of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, and I declare to your Lordship I have hardly a choice. They have different qualities, but with good officers they are all excellent troops." Since that time many distinguished officers have expressed the same opinion; and in the Minute of his Excellency, the present Commander-in-Chief, I find testimony borne both to the strength and to the groundlessness of the local prejudices which are so apt to draw broad, wide, and disparaging comparisons between the different Presidential armies. As regards the peaceful and unwarlike habits which the Madras population has been gradually acquiring, I cannot admit it as an accepted fact, that races cease to become available for effecting military service, under European training and discipline, by ceasing to be habituated to predatory warfare among themselves. If this were so, in proportion as we succeed in establishing a settled Government in India, and in securing internal peace for the empire, we should find it difficult to have a native army capable of defending it. As a matter of fact and of experience this is not the result of that advance in civilisation which makes peace the normal, and war the exceptional, employment of mankind. On the contrary, civilised races are the most capable of military discipline. Physical degeneracy may, indeed, render a race incapable of being good soldiers; but I have had no evidence that such is the condition of the races inhabiting the presidency of Madras.

23. As regards the second objection to the army of Madras, that it is more expensive, no statement has been furnished by which I might judge of the actual value of the objection; but, whatever the difference of expense may be, it must be observed that it is partly due to some peculiarities of organisation which above all others have been supposed, on good grounds, to contribute to its fidelity. The family life led by the Madras sepoy, and the care taken of the families by the Government, had established ties between the Government and the sepoy which have not existed in the same strength in any other portion of the native army of India. It is at least a question not to be summarily disposed of whether this increased security may not be worth its cost.

24. I come now to the third and last of the reasons given for making any proposed reduction fall more largely on the army of Madras than on the armies of the other Presidencies, namely, that it is in excess of the requirements of the country for which its services are required. That this is to some extent true, even when we include the territories beyond sea which have been habitually garrisoned by the Madras troops has been long acknowledged. The excess of the Madras army over the standard of absolute necessity was defended and maintained on the ground that it was the only army of reserve in India. I observe in the papers now before me that his Excellency Sir W. Mansfield took this view of their position and their value in 1867, when Lord Napier, the present Governor of Madras, was in personal communication with him in Calcutta. It is needless to say that if much that is now said of the inefficiency of Madras troops had been believed, no such value could then have been placed upon them. It must be observed, moreover, that to the Madras army has long been intrusted the military occupation, not only of many possessions beyond sea, but of the country of the Nizam, which has always been considered as a station requiring very careful guard. Unless, therefore, Madras troops can be relied upon in times of trouble, far more extensive changes than any now proposed will require to be made in the management and distribution of our military force.

25. In communications which took place early in 1869, between the Government of India and the Government of Madras, respecting the redistribution of divisional and brigade commands in that Presidency, the Government of Madras was induced to consider with some care the number of regiments which were required for its own territory alone. Although you have not quoted this correspondence, it appears that, as the result of the consideration thus given, Lord Napier, Governor of Madras, came to the conclusion that by certain arrangements which he proposed six regiments of Madras infantry, now stationed in the Presidency, might be dispensed with, so far as mere local wants were concerned. But Lord Napier strongly urged that these regiments should be employed on stations beyond the Madras frontier, and that any reduction of force should be applied to troops more recently raised, and having claims on the State less strong than those which might fairly be advanced on behalf of the regiments of the Madras army. It appears to me that the arguments urged on this point by the Government of Madras are well deserving of a careful consideration by the Government of India. My desire is that your Excellency should consider, in view of the general principles indicated in this Despatch, whether the substitution of Madras troops for those of the other Presidencies might not be carried farther than at present, according to the suggestion of Lord Napier. Precisely the same suggestion was made by the late Commander-in-Chief, Sir W. Mansfield, in the letter from the Quartermaster-General to the Secretary to the Government of India, of 16th September, 1868, paragraph 11. The suggestion also of his Excellency the present Commander-in-Chief, relative to an interchange of stations between the Bombay troops occupying the Southern Mahratta Country and the Madras troops occupying stations in the Sangor and Nerbudda territories, appears deserving of serious consideration; but, should any insuperable objection be found to this arrangement, the occupation of the Sangor territories should be rendered complete by the relief of the one remaining regiment of Bengal Cavalry by one from Madras.

26. As, however, I entirely agree with your Lordship that a reduction of military expenditure, in so far as it can be effected with perfect safety, is much required by the financial condition of the country; as, moreover, the progress of the railway system in India, and especially the recent completion of the line which connects Bombay, through the Central Provinces, with the Valley of the Ganges, affords new and most important facilities for military communication, I am prepared to hope and expect that a sensible reduction can be safely made in the strength of the native army. As regards the method of making this reduction by diminishing the rank and file in certain regiments, I authorise you to make such reduction as it may seem to you most expedient within the maximum limit of 9,000 men in all. I also authorise you to effect a portion of this reduction, if you desire it, by breaking up those cadres in the Bengal Army to which your Excellency refers in your minute of the 3rd October, 1870.

27. As regards, however, a further reduction of the cadres, affecting the whole native army of India, the circumstances under which your present proposal comes before her Majesty's Government do not give them confidence that it would even meet the views which your Excellency has expressed, still less that it would afford any hope of a durable settlement. In considering that proposal, and the circumstances under which it has been made, I cannot but observe not only the great differences of opinion which prevail between officers of high authority in India, but on the rapidity with which the same officers have changed their opinions, without any other apparent reason than the external pressure of financial difficulty. So late as the autumn of 1868 it was the unanimous opinion of the government of Sir J. Lawrence that the army of Bengal was numerically too weak for the duties it had to perform, that no reduction could be afforded in it, and that, although the armies of Bombay and Madras were in excess of local requirements, they formed the only army of reserve in India and the need of such reserve might any time suddenly arise. Twelve months later your Government, with the sanction of the same Commander-in-Chief, came to the widely different conclusion that the native army could be reduced with perfect safety by no less than twenty regiments. That proposal was objected to by her Majesty's Government, on the grounds stated in my despatch [No. 23] of 27th January, 1870. You now make another proposal, not as in itself satisfactory to your Government, but as a compromise. The saving to be effected by it does not exceed, even in its ultimate result, the sum of £230,000 per annum, while its immediate effect is calculated at only £150,000. I do not undervalue this saving, but great questions of policy are touched, without being settled, in the measures by which it is to be secured. The reduction of regiments which you propose is strongly protested against by the present Commander-in-Chief as not only impolitic but dangerous, whilst at the same time another member of your Government observes that it is a reduction "inequitably distributed, and insufficient to afford the prospect of a permanent arrangement."

28. The differences and changes of opinion which I have thus reviewed seem to indicate the want of any recognised principles in respect to the duties, number, and distribution of the native army. No doubt there are some considerations bearing on the question which must always have different values in different minds, as, for example, the probability or improbability of foreign invasion, the danger to be apprehended from the forces of native States. But, on the other hand, there are other elements in the case much more numerous and important, which afford data comparatively certain. The opinion formed by the Governor of Madras in respect to the army there seems to have been arrived at after a careful survey of the Presidency, of the character of different districts, and of the new condition arising out of the establishment of railways. It appears to me that a similar review of the whole distribution of the native army should at once be made for the rest of India. I request the immediate attention of your Excellency's Government to this important matter; and I desire to be furnished with your matured opinion on the question of the future distribution of the troops on the stations which may be abandoned, on those which may be held in weaker force, and on those which it might be well to strengthen. Having thus given your opinion on the system under which the country should be occupied, you will inform me further, whether you desire that any reserve force should be maintained, and, if so, what should be its amount. It is most desirable that whatever reduction be now made, especially in the number of regiments, should, as far as possible, be considered final as regards the ordinary or peace establishment. It is quite possible that as the result of such a complete review of our military system, under the new conditions which affect it, a reduction may be afforded even to the full extent of your proposal of October, 1869. You may rely upon my desire to second your efforts for every economy which, after full consideration of all the facts, shall be found consistent with due regard to the safety of the Empire.—I have, &c.,

INDO-EUROPEAN TELEGRAPH.

The annual meeting of this company was held on Wednesday, at the offices, Telegraph-street, the Hon. R. Grimston in the chair.

The report, an abstract of which has already appeared, was held as read.

The CHAIRMAN, in moving the adoption of the report, said the statement of the accounts was not so favourable as the directors could wish, but at the same time they were satisfactory, considering that twelve months ago the prospects of the company were rather gloomy. At present their prospects looked exceedingly favourable. Twelve months ago the company had to create their traffic to India, to compete with rival companies, and to divide with them the traffic, such as it was. Notwithstanding this, it had increased by £20,000, although their capital was only £425,000. Considerable reduction had been made in the expenditure. Messrs. Siemens and Co., when the affairs of the company were at their worst, behaved with great liberality, and he had reason to believe that this firm, after they had been paid the working expenses for maintenance, suffered a loss. Everything had been done by the company to keep out of debt, and if the directors did not declare a dividend he might say that one had been fairly earned. With respect to the claim of £12,000 by the Post-office, when the Government took over the telegraph companies as they took all the advantages they likewise took all the liabilities, and the agreement made by this company with the Electric Telegraph Company was one of them. The Government said it was contrary to public policy to give all the messages from India to one company, and divided them with the other companies. The Board contended that they were entitled to all the messages by virtue of the agreement with the Electric Telegraph company, and as the Government had taken over the property of that Company without its consent, they were bound to carry out the agreement. The question had been referred to the arbitration of Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P. With a view to a further dividend, the directors proposed to repeal some of the articles of association providing for a reserve fund of £10,000 a year previous to dividend to recoup the capital at the expiration of twenty-five years. There was no necessity for a reserve fund in the case of land lines, which were kept in repair day by day out of the revenue. He preferred a present dividend to a fragment at some indefinite time.

Mr. W. H. Barlow seconded the motion for the adoption of the report, and it was carried.

The meeting was then made special, and various alterations were made in the articles of association. A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the proceedings.

Miscellaneous.

THE VACANT CONSULSHIP AT JEDDAH.—We have heard on good authority that Syed Abdoollah, whose services in connection with India must be pretty well known to many of our readers, has been offered the Consulship of Jeddah by the Secretary of State for India. The worthy Syed however has declined the offer.

ANGLO INDIAN TEA COMPANY.—A second issue of 2,000 £10 shares of the Anglo-Indian Tea Company is announced. The prospectus states that the undertaking was formed in 1871, and the business throughout has been steadily progressing, the dividend for the half-year just ended being at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum.

CIVIL ENGINEERING COLLEGE.—It is announced by the Civil Service Commissioners that at the examination for the Indian Civil Engineering College in July next the examination in English literature will be limited to the following authors :—Shakespeare, King John; Bacon, Essays; Milton, Liberty of Printing; Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel; Scott, Fortunes of Nigel; and that the examination in English history will be limited to the period A.D. 1600 to A.D. 1688.

LORD MAYO.—The directors of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce held a meeting on Wednesday, at which they passed a lengthy resolution recording their condolence and sympathy with the Countess of Mayo and her family on the bereavement they have sustained in the death of the Right Hon. the Earl of Mayo, and deploring, in common with the rest of her Majesty's subjects, the loss of a faithful, able, and devoted public servant, whose career had been marked in the distinguished position he held by administrative genius, beneficent rule, and humane and sympathising regard for the welfare of British India.

ALBERT ARBITRATION.—Two important cases arising out of the Albert Arbitration came before Lord Cairns. The first was an application from an annuitant in the Family Endowment Society, who claimed interest on the valuation of his annuity from the date of the winding-up to the present time. This was allowed at the rate of four per cent., the cost of the application to be costs in the liquidation. In the second case, a deferred Indian annuitant claimed to have his annuity calculated according to the English table of rates, and not the Indian, although he had resided during some portion of the time over which his payments extended in England, where the rate of mortality is lower than in India. This application was dismissed with costs.

THE NEW VICEROY OF INDIA.—The Mayor of Winchester has invited the new Viceroy of India, Lord Northbrook, who is a resident in Hampshire, to a grand banquet prior to his departure for his new and exalted post in India. He has accepted the invitation, and it is to be held at St. John's Rooms, Winchester, the most capacious in the city, on Saturday, the 9th inst. The arrangements are yet far from complete, but it may be mentioned that Mr. Forder has arranged for a special train to leave Winchester for Waterloo station after the close of the proceedings, in order to convey those guests coming from and returning to town to their homes. It will leave at half-past ten o'clock, stopping at any intermediate station on the way for the accommodation of the passengers.

BANDA-KIRWEE PRIZE.—The Special Prize Committee of General Whitlock's force has established a claim of arrears of interest for over four years on Rs. 532 190-6-11, the moiety of a sum, amounting to about ten lakhs, deposited by the prize agents in July, 1858, with the collector of Banda. One moiety of this deposit—viz., Rs. 523,253-4-6—the Government of India long coveted to retain, on an Alabama principle, to partially cover its war loss of plundered revenue. Sir Stafford Northcote, however, in 1867, questioned the justice of this arrangement, and the law officers of the Crown condemned it. Rs. 523,253-4-6, was therefore restored to the prize fund, with interest from the date of deposit. But the interest on the moiety—Rs. 532,190-6-11—it has been recently ascertained by the Special Prize Committee, has only been allowed from nearly the end of 1862 instead of the middle of 1858. And it is the claim for the difference which has been asserted by the committee and allowed by the Government, we presume with interest, on the accumulated total from Jan. 19, 1867, when it ought to have been disbursed under the Royal grant to the present time. A rumour has reached us that the Indian Home Government has had it in contemplation to confiscate the prize money, which belongs to the late General Whitlock's force, in order to square the prize accounts of Sir H. Rose's (Lord Strathnairn's) Division, to which it is said about £10,000, by a curious error, has been overpaid in excess of the out-turn of its capture. The Special Prize Committee, we are informed, is also pressing a larger claim for interest for over four years on the whole prize deposit (including £146,000 in silver coin), which lay dead under orders of the Government from 1858 to 1862 in the Allahabad treasury.—Home-ward Mail.

GENERAL FORESTER, M.P., AND OTHERS V. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.—This case, which has been standing over for judgment, has been further heard at the request of the committee on one point—the title of the Begum Sumroo or Sombre to the Jagheer of Badshapore. Their lordships confined the discussion to one counsel on each side, and allowed of no reference to another appeal, which had been heard and known as the "Arms Suit." The appellants sought to recover possession of a valuable property called Pergunnah Badshapore Tharsa, which had been taken by the Government of India on the death of the Begum Sumroo (or Sombre), who by deed of gift and will had granted and devised it to David Ochterlony Dyce Sombre, the original plaintiff in the suit, since deceased. The principal questions which arose were, whether the act of the Government of India in taking possession was not an act of State against a State or an international act, over which a municipal court had no jurisdiction, as contended on the other side; and further, whether the Begum had such an interest as enabled her to make a deed of gift, or whether her interest did not determine and cease on her death, so as to entitle the Government of India then to take possession of the same. General Forester had married the widow of Mr. Dyce Sombre, and both were represented with other parties on the present occasion. Sir Roundell Palmer proceeded to argue the question of the title of the Begum from whom the appellants claimed the property. The argument was of a technical nature, in part depending on a comparison of dates, difficulties having arisen from the difference between the Mahomedan and the Christian modes of computation, and also in part upon the genuineness of some documents connected with the title. Their lordships sat beyond the usual hour to enable the learned counsel to conclude his address. Their lordships appointed two days next week for the further argument on the question raised.

AN INDIAN APPEAL.—The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had before it on Feb. 23 the case of Juttendromohun Tagore and another v. Ganendromohun Tagore and others, the opening of which was alluded to in our last. The argument on the present occasion was of an interesting character, and embraced one topic which was discussed at some length—whether a Hindoo by becoming a Christian by baptism had forfeited all right to maintenance, and become an outcast, incapable of inheriting, as he could not perform the religious services for his father. Mr. Joshua Williams, Q.C., at the sitting of the Court, continued his argument on the construction of the will of the testator, which could not be carried out. The only son and heir could not be disinherited by the trusts created by the will, which rendered it invalid, and he had, in deference to his client, to submit that Ganendromohun Tagore was entitled to maintenance, notwithstanding that he had become a Christian. He therefore confidently submitted to their lordships that the will could not be upheld, and that his client had a claim to the corpus of the estates. Mr. J. D. Bell followed, and declared that the will was a most extraordinary one, and could not be carried out. Supposing all the estates were valid, the residue had not been disposed of, and it therefore necessarily vested in the heir-at-law. Further, a Hindoo, by becoming a Christian, did not ipso facto become disinherited, for this could not be, unless there was an act of excommunication. Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., replied: There were only two questions for their lordships, and, divested of all extraneous matter, these were in fact—what was the intention of the testator, and could his intention be carried out without violating the law? It had been the tendency of the Courts in India as well as of the Judicial Committee to uphold the wills of Hindoos. By becoming a Christian he would show that a Hindoo became an outcast according to the Hindoo law, because he could not perform the religious rites for his father. Lord Justice James asked how he became an outcast. There must be some act to make him an outcast. An act was necessary to make him an outcast. Mr. Forsyth maintained that ips facto he became an outcast as he could not perform the ceremonies, and therefore he had no right of inheritance. Mr. Cochrane addressed their lordships on behalf of one of the parties he represented. Their lordships, on the conclusion of the argument, took time to consider their judgment again.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, Feb. 26.—THE BANK OF BOMBAY.—Mr. GRANT DUFF, in answer to Mr. FAWCETT, said: The second report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the failure of the Bombay Bank contains opinions, given to the Secretary of State in the strictest confidence, about the future policy of Government with respect to the Presidency banks, opinions by which Government may or may not be guided. These opinions have been treated as strictly private, even in the India Office, and it would be quite contrary to practice, as well as inconvenient to the public service, if I were to lay them on the table, at least at present.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, Feb. 29.—THE PERSIAN MISSION.—Mr. EASTWICK asked the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to carry out the recommendation of the Diplomatic Committee of 1871, by transferring the control of our relations with Persia to the India-office; or, if not, by adjusting the payments for the Persian Mission to the advantage of India.—Lord ENFIELD: Lord Granville has given his best consideration to the suggestions of the Committee in regard to the Persian mission. He cannot, however, concur with the Committee as to placing that mission under the authority of the Secretary of State for India, nor can he undertake to recommend the Treasury to assent to any arrangement other than that which was deliberately made in the year 1836 for providing the expenditure of the Persian mission.

THE METRIC SYSTEM IN INDIA.—Mr. CRAWFORD asked the Under-Secretary for India whether he would lay upon the table of the House a copy of an Act passed by the Legislative Council of India, providing for the compulsory introduction of the metric system of weights and measures into the administration of the railways and public departments in India; whether the railway companies were parties to and approved the Act, whether it had received the sanction of the Chambers of Commerce and other bodies representing public opinion in India; and whether the Secretary of State for India in Council was prepared to allow, or would disallow, the Act in question.—Mr. GRANT DUFF: In reply to my hon. friend's first question I have to say that there will be no objection to laying on the table the Act to which I understand him to allude. The information which has reached me is hardly sufficient to enable me to answer my hon. friend's second question. In reply to his third question I have to say that the Act is still under the consideration of the Secretary of State in Council.—Mr. CRAWFORD gave notice that he should bring the subject under the consideration of the House at the first opportunity.

THE BOMBAY BANK.—Mr. FAWCETT asked the Under-Secretary for India whether the second report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the failure of the Bombay Bank referred to the past connection of the Government with the bank, as well as the future management of Government banks; and whether, if this should be the case, he would consent to lay upon the table all that portion of the report which related to the former subject.—Mr. GRANT DUFF: There are undoubtedly some passages in the reports to which the hon. gentleman alludes which refer to the affairs of the Old Bank of Bombay, but they are mixed up with other matters, and the whole of the documents are, as I said on Tuesday, of a strictly confidential character, in the nature of privileged communications made to the Secretary of State by certain persons who, having been employed as commissioners and having reported as commissioners, were consulted in their private capacity as to future policy by the Secretary of State. Hon. members will see that such documents are not of the kind which the House in its wisdom usually asks a Government to lay upon its table. Four volumes on the subject of the Old Bank of Bombay, including the report on the affairs of the Old Bank of Bombay by those very same persons in their capacity of commissioners, are already in the hands of hon. members.

THE KOOKA INSURRECTION.—Mr. HAVILAND-BURKE asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether Deputy-Commissioner Cowan did, as stated in the Times of Feb. 5, and after the complete suppression of the Kooka Mutiny, select fifty men out of the number of prisoners to be executed by being blown from guns; whether such fifty men were so executed; whether Mr. Forsyth, the Commissioner at Unballa, caused sixteen other men connected with the same mutiny to be executed; and, if so, whether there was any court or tribunal for the trial of the said sixty-six men, and what was the finding of such court or tribunal; whether, previously to such executions, any communications were made by the officers above-named to the then Governor-General of India, and what reply, if any, was received from his Excellency; and whether he had any objection to lay upon the table of the House all papers or correspondence relating to the Kooka mutiny.—Sir D. WEDDERBURN also asked whether the Government intended to institute any special inquiry into the circumstances connected with the Kooka insurrection.—MR. GRANT DUFF: My reply to the hon. gentleman's first question must be, I deeply regret to say, in the affirmative. My reply to his second question must be that the number was 49, the 50th having been cut down in self-defence by an officer of a native State. My reply to the first part of the third question must also, I regret to say, be in the affirmative. As to the second part of it, I have not seen the finding of the Court, but I believe that Mr. Forsyth's proceedings, whether justifiable or not—as to which I give no opinion—were not on the face of them irregular. My reply to the fourth question must be that, previous to the executions, there seems to have been no communication about the executions with the late Viceroy. When, on the 19th of January, he received the intelligence of what had been done, he telegraphed to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, "Stop any summary execution of Kookas without your express orders." (Hear, hear.) As to the fifth question, there will be no objection whatever to lay the papers on the table when they are complete. At present they are so imperfect as to add little or nothing to what hon. members know already. In reply to my hon. friend (Sir D. Wedderburn) I have to say that a special inquiry has been instituted on the spot, and the Secretary of State in Council has informed the Government of India that he awaits with anxiety the report of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. (Hear, hear.)—MR. HAVILAND-BURKE said the hon. gentleman had not told the House whether any court or tribunal had been held for the trial of the sixty-six men before they were executed.—MR. GRANT DUFF: I thought this might have been inferred from my statement that, so far as I have any information, Mr. Forsyth's proceedings were in proper form and were in no way irregular.—MR. HAVILAND BURKE was still unable to understand whether there was any trial before the execution of these men.—MR. GRANT DUFF: My answer related to the proceedings of Mr. Forsyth. So far as we are aware, there was no trial of any sort by Mr. Cowan; he executed without trial.

PETITIONS PRESENTED.—By Sir J. HAY, from Captain Cameron, late Madras Army, in favour of compensation for retiring bonus.—By Mr. GORE LANTON, from Colonel Charles Cooper, on the retired list of her Majesty's Bengal Army, praying for redress.

THE KUKA OUTBREAK.

The Times remarks that the whole affair carries a strange illustration of the difficulties of Indian Governments. There was no grievance whatever in the matter. These Kukas, so far as their designs had any coherence at all, aimed simply at the re-establishment of a certain religious ascendancy, to the prejudice of their fellow-subjects professing a different faith. That they could have accomplished nothing in the direction of their aims, and that they must sooner or later have been defeated, signifies little in estimating the character of their outbreak. They might, beyond all dispute, have created a disturbance which it would have cost much to quell, and to prevent these commotions is the first object of our rule in India. Whatever may be the success of our administration in other respects, this much must be allowed, that we keep the peace and render life and property secure. But for the weight of our arm, India would be the scene of war and bloodshed from one end of the Empire to the other. Chief would rise against Chief, race against race, and religionists against religionists. With very brief time for reflection, Mr. Cowan was called upon for a momentous decision. The resolution which he adopted might really have been necessary to avert a formidable rising, or it might, without such necessity, have hurried these misguided men to death. Which of these two views of the case would have been the more correct we must yet wait to learn. The inquiries instituted on the spot by the order of the late Viceroy may be expected to elicit the truth in so far as it is ascertainable, and for the result of those investigations it will be prudent to wait.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1872.—Her Majesty's Commissioners for the International Exhibition of 1872 have decided that the Committees of Selection for the different classes of manufactures in the approaching Exhibition shall be composed partly of connoisseurs and partly of persons engaged in the production of objects comprised in each class. A number of gentlemen connected with the jewellery trade have met at the Royal Albert Hall, to discuss the mode in which the Committee of Selection in the class of jewellery should be appointed. It was stated that India would be exceptionally well represented as regards jewellery. Special collections of the jewellery worn by the peasantry of different countries are being formed. General Scott, secretary to her Majesty's Commissioners, explained to the meeting that in order to get together a loan collection of modern jewellery (the lenders of which would probably desire to use some of the ornaments on particular occasions during the London season), jewellers who were entrusted with such loans by private persons would be allowed to remove the jewels from the Exhibition on condition of their being immediately returned after use on the one occasion for which they were required.

POSTAGE ON OFFICIAL GAZETTES.—With reference to a letter received from the officiating Director General of the Post-office of India, the Governor General in Council has sanctioned the proposal therein made to apply to official Gazettes the reduced rates of postage chargeable on newspapers under the Notification of the Financial Department, dated June 2 last. The superintendent of the Fort St. George, Bombay, &c., Gazette were instructed to conform to the conditions laid down in that Notification.

THE HISTORY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE IN INDIA.

FROM THE

APPOINTMENT OF LORD HARDINGE

POLITICAL EXTINCTION OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.

BY

LIONEL JAMES TROTTER,

Late of the 2nd Bengal Fusiliers.

The first volume of this History embraces the period from Lord Hardinge's appointment in 1844 to the retirement of the Marquis of Dalhousie in 1858.

The second volume commences with the arrival of Lord Canning in India in 1856, and closes with his lordship's death in 1862. This being the most eventful period in the annals of the East India Company, including the Mutiny, great pains have been taken in its narration.

"Captain Trotter has done good service in providing the public with a sequel to a standard work. And in every way his performance is worthy to take rank with that of his predecessor. The thoroughly satisfactory manner in which the task has been performed is greatly to the author's credit. We take our leave of the work, congratulating its author upon having produced an addition to the 'History of India' at once permanent in purpose and popular in execution; acceptable in every way to the wants of the public, and especially adapted for the enlightenment of young members of the local service, to whom the modern annals of the country which they help to administer are of far more importance than the history of remote periods having little or no relation to the present day."—Standard.

"Both the plan and execution of the work are deserving of high praise. Full of interest and animation, and narrates with clearness and brevity all that took place during the period of which it treats. The second volume of Mr. Trotter's history possesses the same merits by which the first was distinguished. It is written with great animation, and often with considerable graphic power. It tells its story with perspicuity and without needless or tiresome digressions. It avoids as far as possible that controversial vein into which Indian politicians and historians are alike prone to fall, and it is as impartial as any work is likely to be which deals with times so near our own. The narrative of the spirit-stirring events of the mutiny will of course have the greatest attraction for most readers, and it is in truth the best, as it is the principal part of the present volume. It appears to us that Mr. Trotter has been eminently successful in his treatment of a very exciting and interesting period of recent history."—London Review.

"The volume is full of interesting matter, comprising every event of importance during the exciting period of the rebellion, told in a concise, straightforward, and impartial manner, unincumbered by those copious extracts from documentary evidence which often serve no other purpose than increasing the bulk without adding to the usefulness of a work of this description."—Observer.

"Captain Trotter's reflections are few. . . . He has his own views, though he does not force them upon us in detail. . . . All this proves him to be far above the narrowness of the average Anglo-Indian. He speaks out boldly, too, in defence of Lord Gough. . . . A word as to our author's descriptive powers; they are such as his lighter writings would lead us to expect. . . . Whatever he has to tell Captain Trotter tells it in an animated and picturesque style. The night on the field at Ferozeshuhur . . . is admirably painted; so is the grand success of Goojrat. The disarming of the veterans of the Khalsa . . . is a striking scene. Captain Trotter's book opens up many other interesting questions; it is full of notices of social changes; it points out the specially unfortunate way in which the annexation of Oudh was managed."—Fortnightly Review.

"Here we have before us the first volume of an eminently readable history. . . . The arrangement of the matter, the style, and, above all, the spirit which pervades his pages, are worthy of great commendation. Mr. Trotter is singularly free from the faults of a partisan writer. . . . The volume concludes with a masterly criticism on Lord Dalhousie's character and services."—Calcutta Englishman.

"We cannot say that he has dealt unjustly by Lord Canning's memory. . . . A well-considered volume, in which the heartiest acknowledgments are paid to Lord Canning for his temperate wisdom at a time when there was no man more abused than he. . . . He writes thoughtfully, yet with a soldier's sense of the stir of a brisk military narrative. His history of this great struggle is full and impartial. . . . We need not follow him through his vigorous rehearsal of the well-known incidents. It forms a very lucid history, the several parts being well planned and well grouped, and no important point being omitted or misrepresented."—Examiner.

Diseases and casualties incidental to youth may be safely treated by the use of these excellent medicaments, according to the printed directions folded round each box and pot. Nor is this Ointment alone applicable to external ailments. Conjointly with the Pills it exercises the most salutary influence in checking inflammations situated in the interior of the body; when rubbed upon the back and chest it gives the most sensible relief in asthma, bronchitis, pleurisy, and threatening consumption. Holloway's remedies are especially serviceable in liver and stomach complaints. For the cure of bad legs, all sorts of wounds, sores, and likewise scrofula and scorbutic affections, this Ointment produces a cooling and soothing feeling most acceptable to the sufferer.

Summary and Review.

Now that the Indian mails appear to arrive regularly on Monday mornings, the publication of Allen's Mail will in future take place, as in fact it has generally done for some time past, on Monday afternoon instead of Tuesday.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Feb. 19; Agra and Madras, Feb. 17; Calcutta, Feb. 16.

THE startling news of Lord Mayo's murder had filled all India with grief at the violent ending of a life so precious to the country, and of fierce indignation against the murderer. In Bombay, as in Calcutta, all business for the time was suspended, the shops and offices were everywhere closed, all festive gatherings were at once adjourned for many days, and the only meetings that took place were those of residents, white and black, all eager to express their feelings of genuine sorrow for the murdered man and of lively sympathy with his widow. On Saturday, the 17th February, the Town Hall of Bombay was thronged with one of the largest crowds ever seen there. The sad news hastened the departure of the King of Siam from Bombay, which he left for Calcutta on the 17th. Mourning, we are told, was generally worn, and the churches were draped in black. Elsewhere will be found particulars of the visit which ended so fatally for Lord Mayo. It is worth noting how much a sudden change of purpose on his part had to do with his untimely death. His work of inspection being over for the day, there was just time, he thought, to look at Mount Harriet before sunset instead of waiting for the morrow. The hill in question had been pointed out to him as a good site for a sanitarium; and, with his usual promptitude, he caught at the first opportunity to explore the spot for himself. How the darkness on his return favoured the assassin we all know.

IN the first outbreak of public feeling, it was natural that charges should go forth against the local authorities, as having taken scant precautions for the Viceroy's safety. General Stewart's official statement however, which is generally confirmed by other witnesses of the murder, seems to show that all due precautions had been taken, down to the very moment when he himself, with Lord Mayo's leave, turned aside to "give some orders to the station overseers." What happened a moment after seemed to justify a remark which the late Viceroy had often been heard to make on like occasions. "If they have resolved to kill me, they care nothing for their own lives, and they will do it in spite of guards." So strong had always been his antipathy to guards that in all his tours Major Bourke had to make his arrangements in private for the protection of his brother's person. When Captain Lockwood and Colonel Watastein were waiting on the pier for Lord Mayo's return, they could see no one loitering about. Unfortunately for Lord Mayo, the very torch-bearers who were lighting his steps had moved on further ahead, because he disliked the smell of their torches. How the assassin got up to him, nobody seems able to tell, but he was seen fastening on his back "like a tiger," and, before help could reach his victim, the deed was done. A moment afterwards the assassin was knocked down and half killed with blows that could not undo his cruel work. Lord Mayo was dead before the terrible news could reach the ears of his wife, who had dinner waiting for him on board the Glasgow. The post mortem enquiry showed how easily "a common cooking knife" could serve the purpose of a determined ruffian as well as the best-tempered blade that ever was forged.

SOME accounts of the murder, as published in the Madras papers, speak of two men as rushing at Lord Mayo, one of whom got away undetected in the subsequent confusion. It is also stated that some of the torch-bearers threw their lights into the water, as the Viceroy fell in. Hitherto however nothing has transpired in confirmation of these accounts. In Calcutta the official cue is to ignore any political motive for the crime, and Mr. Justice Phear, speaking publicly in his own High Court, ascribed it to personal and fanatical sources. Such, however, is not the view hitherto expressed by the public in Bombay and Calcutta; and, whichever reading of the sad event may prove the right one, it was certainly premature to accept that which, according to the evidence, seems the least probable.

ACCORDING to a telegram of Feb. 5 from General Brownlow, that commander, who was then at Sylloo Savoong, was going to move against some of the Northern Howlong tribes in his front as soon as his supplies came up. The southern tribes were more submissively disposed. Three formidable rivers and ranges still lay between him and Ben Mooya, the most powerful of the Northern Chiefs. Rattan Poya had not come back; but General Brownlow could not expect more from him than what he had already done. General Bouchier on the 13th was advancing in a south-easterly direction, and had met with no fresh opposition.

FROM a private letter we get some interesting details touching the Loshais and their villages:—

The villages are much cleaner than those in the Himalayas. No offensiveness of any kind assails the traveller's nostrils. The houses are made of split bamboos, interlaced to form a kind of matting, some covered above this with palm leaves, and the roof is made of the latter, kept down by bamboos; no windows, and a little square doorway with a sliding bamboo door. The houses are all raised, on a wooden framework, from the ground about three feet. It is a mistake to suppose the Loshais do not affect any clothes; they all wear a large cotton shawl or chudder, and many of them a small cotton puggree. They are seldom without a bamboo pipe in their mouths. We have had beautiful weather lately, a heavy fog occasionally in the morning being the only drawback. We are over 4,200 feet up now, and the morning air is very fresh and pleasant; the sun is very powerful during the day.

LATEST telegrams report good things from both columns of the Loshai Expedition. On the 27th February all the Northern Howlong Chiefs had submitted to General Brownlow, and begun to bring in the usual peace offerings, besides swearing, after the Loshai fashion, to remain good friends henceforth with the British Government. All captives have been sent into the British camp. On the 5th March General Bouchier's column had begun their return homewards, and the General himself hoped to reach Tipai Mukh the next day. The Loshai tribes in his neighbourhood were behaving in a friendly manner. Part of his troops had already started for Cachar, and the health of all was reported good.

A BOMBAY telegram of March 8 announces the arrival at Bombay of H.M.S. Glasgow, with the body of Lord Mayo on board. We note also that a steamer has been despatched from this country to convey Lady Mayo and her husband's remains direct to Ireland.

WE are glad to inform our readers that some new steps are being taken to facilitate the retirement of senior officers in the Indian Army. The Duke of Argyll has resolved to extend the present Regulations, as laid down in the Furlough Rules of 1854 and 1868, with regard to the amount of leave reckonable as service towards pension. For the future officers will be allowed to count as service towards pension five years' leave in thirty-five and six years' leave in thirty-eight years' aggregate service. Thus, an officer who has actually served thirty-two years in India may at once retire on £600 a-year, if he has also spent six years on furlough. This concession extends to longer terms of years the principle under which three years in twenty-five and four in thirty may be spent on leave without being reckoned against an officer's claim to retiring pension.

CAPTAIN EVELYN BARING, R.A., who has just been made Private Secretary to Lord Northbrook, is said to be a young officer of no small ability and in all ways fairly qualified for his new post. The appointment of Colonel Earle, of the Grenadier Guards, as the new Viceroy's Military Secretary seems open to little objection on personal grounds. Colonel Earle, besides having been for some years adjutant of his battalion, was at one time Military Secretary to the General Commanding in Canada. He is said to have very courteous manners and a wide popularity. It is objected, on the other hand, that he has never passed through the Staff College, and knows nothing of India. If this be true, we can only hope that the necessary knowledge will come to him in good time, and that India will not suffer in the meanwhile from any lack of special qualifications on his part.

THE Indian Army will appreciate the compliment paid to it by the Prince of Wales in the selection of so brilliant an officer as Major-General Probyn for the post of Equerry to his Royal Highness on the retirement of Colonel Keppel. General Probyn is still comparatively a young officer, whose commission dates no further back than 1849, while his regimental rank in the Cadre of the 3rd Light Cavalry of Bengal is still only that of Captain. But his name as a dashing leader of Irregular Horse has been before the world ever since the Mutinies, and fresh honours and brevet promotions were heaped upon him for his services in China under Sir Hope Grant in 1860. Besides a Victoria Cross and a Companionship of the Bath, he became an A.D.C. to the Viceroy of India, obtained his Colonelcy in 1866, and was gazetted a Major-General in 1870.

It is with no small pleasure that we hail the announcement of her Majesty's intention to bestow a baronetcy on Sir George Pollock, to whom more than anyone the safety of our Indian Empire was owing in the dark days of 1842. The honours lately showered on the grey head of him who led the Avenging Army to Kabul thirty years ago have at length atoned for any previous slackness in acknowledging services at once brilliant in themselves and rendered under great discouragements at a very critical moment in Indian history. When General Pollock reached Peshawur in February, 1842, the work before him was about as formidable as it could well have been. His own Sepoys were on the verge of open mutiny at the mere thought of entering a country which had proved so fatal to their comrades. Our Sikh allies were becoming more of a hindrance than a help to us. Colonel Wild's brigade had just been driven back from the mouth of the Khyber. It was known that Sale was hard pressed at Jellalabad, and that our troops at Kabul were in a perilous plight, if indeed they had not already undergone the worst. But the brave old soldier who had fought under Lord Lake, led the chase after Holkar with his light horsed-guns, and commanded the artillery in the Burmese War, was not to be daunted at such a time. In a few weeks he had restored discipline among his troops, infused into their officers some of his own spirit, and proved his own generalship by driving before him the defenders of the Khyber Pass. But even after reaching Jellalabad, there was tough work cut out for him by the reluctance with which Lord Ellenborough modified his repeated orders for an early retirement direct from Afghanistan. It was only after repeated remonstrances from Pollock and his worthy comrade Nott, the hero of Kandahar, that Lord Auckland's successor at length permitted the two commanders to "retire from Afghanistan by way of Kabul," if they chose to take on themselves the whole responsibility of so bold a move. Luckily Nott and Pollock were not to be frightened by shadows. Through victory after victory our troops advanced on Kabul; Lady Sale and her fellow-captives were rescued from a dismal fate; the burning of the great bazaar at Kabul bore stern witness to the presence of the Avenging Army; and when Pollock once more emerged from the Khyber, he could boast of having retrieved the honour of the British arms in a campaign begun and carried through without a check or blunder on his own part, in the teeth of ill-concealed doubts and unwilling sanctions elsewhere. To Pollock therefore and his trusty lieutenant Nott belong all the praise which in other great campaigns has been shared between the commanders and the Government that employed them. The last honour conferred on the famous old officer of Bengal Artillery will at least serve to perpetuate the memory of a successful soldier, whose greatest service to his country was performed under circumstances of special hazard to his own reputation.

In the present day, when iron is in such demand that our capitalists are beginning to open iron mines in foreign countries, we are tempted to wonder why so little has been done to develop India's alleged wealth in that useful metal. If there is plenty of iron to be got out there, one heavy item of outlay on Indian railways might be saved with advantage to nearly all concerned. In days of old, according to the author of "Ancient and Mediæval India," it was the custom to put iron roofs on large buildings supported by a thousand columns. It was in the workshops of Western India that the so-called Damascus blades were originally forged. The Persian proverb, "to give an Indian answer," meant a cut with an Indian sword. In some campaigns of a pretty recent date our troops had reason to attest the sharpness and excellent temper of the Sikh "talwars," forged from iron in the Punjab hills. In the days of Alexander, thirty pounds of steel was deemed a worthy gift from Porus to "Macedonia's madman." To this day the steel wrought in Cutch may vie for the beauty of its temper with the best workmanship of Sheffield and Glasgow. It is not long since an English officer erected a rude furnace in the hills near Simlah, and turned out iron superior to that obtained from Glasgow and Merthyr Tydfil at seventy shillings a ton. Excellent iron can be made in Kamaon from the ore found in the clay, slate, and limestone beds on the Ramgunga. For sixty miles indeed along the base of the lower Himalayas about Kamaon extends a rich belt of iron-bearing country, while the materials for smelting the ore lie close at hand, in the shape of primæval forests of hard timber. The iron-bearing tract near Simlah covers two hundred square miles, and yields a malleable ore very like that of Sweden and Norway. Iron is still forged in Kattiawar, Bandelkhand, Mysore, and Malabar, but only in small quantities. There is no doubt, however, that plenty of iron might still be found all over India, and brought into the market there at cheaper rates than the metal supplied from this country. Will the new Department of Trade and Agriculture turn their attention to this matter?

A CORRESPONDENT of the Pall Mall Gazette quotes from a minute framed by Sir Bartle Frere in 1860 some weighty pleading in favour of a High Court of Appeal for native Indian Princes. The need for some such tribunal has also, we think, been fairly brought out by the recent debate in the House of Commons on the grievances of the dethroned Nawab of Tonk. The weight of argument on that occasion certainly leaned in favour of the losing side; not one of the leading speakers on the other having laid any apparent stress on the thoroughness of the means taken for deciding the question of the Nawab's guilt. It seemed, indeed, as though the issue before Parliament was made to turn solely on the fact that so many authorities in India and at home had successively confirmed the penal consequences of an inquiry conducted on the spot by an Indian Political of no judicial experience. What's done cannot be undone, was, in fact, the beginning and end of the Ministerial defence. No one impeaches the perfect honesty of statesmen like Lords Lawrence and Mayo, Sir S. Northcote, and the present Minister for India; and it is not unlikely that the ex-Nawab has gotten no more than his deserts. But that has nothing to do with the question whether he received a fair trial, and was convicted on sufficient evidence. To this question no satisfactory answer has yet been given, and many people will therefore continue to believe in the absence of due grounds for a satisfactory answer. Would it not then be better policy in the long run to grant these native feudatories the right of appeal from the award of an English Resident to some Court, either of Native Princes, or of English judges duly qualified to thread the mazes of Indian evidence?

WE notice with great regret the death on Tuesday last of Professor Goldstücker, one of the foremost Sanskrit scholars of his day, and for some years Professor of Sanskrit in London University. His almost sudden death has left unfinished the great work, a Sanskrit Dictionary, to which he had devoted the labour of many years. His edition of the Mimansa had only reached a few parts, and his treatise on Sanskrit particles remains in manuscript. The articles he contributed to Chambers's Encyclopedia and some of the leading reviews attest the depth and accuracy of his scholarship. His loss indeed will be severely felt alike by scholars and personal friends in this country. Still greater will that loss prove to literature, if his surviving relative should carry out Dr. Goldstücker's last instructions to the letter, by destroying manuscripts which might add largely to our knowledge of old-world lore.

KATTYWAR.—Following the example of Broach, Bombay, Surat, Ahmedabad, and other cities, an association has been started in Kattywar. It is named the Kattywar Rajeshthani Sabha (that is, the Kattywar Political Association). It has been started under the leadership of the Princes and Sardars. Its head-quarters is Rajkote, and Mr. Dinshaw Ardeshir Taleyarkhan has been appointed secretary.

FREE PASSAGES TO AND FROM EUROPE.—The Government of India has ruled that attached officers when proceeding on field service with native regiments to which they stand attached, are entitled to a free passage on board ship for one horse each, required bona fide for their own use. With reference to and in continuation of Orders, it is notified that the Government of India has been also pleased to grant to warrant officers returning from furlough to England on medical certificate, a free passage by rail for themselves and families, from the port of debarkation to their destination. For this purpose they should obtain a requisition as usual from the officer of the Quartermaster-general's Department at the port of debarkation. With reference to G.G.O. No. 785 of 1869, it having become necessary to prescribe what officers coming to Bombay for passage to England shortly before the commencement of the trooping season should be detained to take their passage in the first troopship, the Government of India has ruled that officers entitled to passage at the public expense and obtaining leave from and after the 1st September in each year shall be required to proceed on the first troopship leaving after their arrival in Bombay, which place they must of course reach within the time ordinarily granted to officers to proceed to the port of embarkation. His Excellency the C. in C. will be so good as to cause this to be stated in the Order granting each officer leave.

THE INCOME-TAX IN INDIA.

IF the weight of evidence were the only thing which statesmen had to consider in pursuing a given line of policy, we should think that Lord Northbrook would have no difficulty in settling the fate of the Indian Income-tax. What Sir W. Muir's Government think of it we have already seen; and now comes a Report as telling from the Government of Bengal. A Minute, signed by Mr. Money, of the Revenue Board, accompanies the Report, while an appendix contains a mass of significant returns collected by the leading officials in the Province, hardly one of whom but has something to say from his own experience touching the effect produced by the continuance of the income-tax on the popular mind. One Commissioner after another bears witness to such a state of feeling caused by the tax as no true friend to either rulers or subjects would care to see confirmed or intensified by its continuance. One Commissioner declares that, "since the British connection with India began, no measure has ever been introduced which caused such deep dislike to our rule;" and this, he adds, "is the opinion of all classes, official and unofficial," in his division. What tends to make the tax doubly repulsive is the uncertainty of the rate at which it is levied from year to year, and the haste with which it is assessed. Another asserts that in his Division the tax "is simply hateful to all who pay it, and appears to be generally recognised as an arbitrary exaction."

A third Commissioner declares that it is "universally condemned by those who have had to realise it, and those who have been called on to pay. It has borne hardest on the lowest class of incomes among cultivators and petty traders." In the opinion of a fourth it is "universally unpopular, and has been the source of considerable oppression, and has provoked more or less discontent," and it has "pressed with the greatest severity upon the poor of the agricultural classes." One Collector warns us against supposing that the tax was popular because no officer in his district found any resistance offered to his assessments. On the contrary, it is "intensely unpopular," besides being "fundamentally unsuited to the conditions of society" in India. Another district officer is sure that the income-tax "has caused much discontent. There perhaps has never been any measure which made itself so universally felt all over the district." The same witness fears that "the memory of it will last some time, and will prevent the people from looking with a friendly eye on the approaching census."

Another Collector declares that the people in his district looked with uneasy suspicion even on the light assessment of 1869, but their alarm and discontent were heightened by each subsequent increase in the rate of the impost. Yet another maintains that the additional half per cent. taken in the latter part of 1869 caused "general dissatisfaction," which he proceeds to illustrate by the following extract from the latter of one of his subordinates:—"The pitching of my tent at any place has sent consternation into neighbouring villages. 'There is an officer of Government come down among us,' the villagers reason; 'what can he come for but to tax us? They have hitherto exempted the poor, but now they will tax all alike.' " Very different indeed this is from the spirit in which Government officers used to be received!

From the statements of other witnesses it is clear that the people were aggrieved even less by the burden of the tax than by its continuance after the first levy. "Every deputy commissioner and assessor," writes one official, "asserts that the second demand for the same year, under Act 23 of 1869, was regarded by the people as a breach of faith by the Government. I know it was bitterly resented. . . . Hundreds paid, because they hoped that in doing so they were contributing their quota to meet a pressing demand, and that in paying they would obtain a quittance against further annoyance." So too another witness of equal authority believes that "the general impression was that it was somewhat of a breach of faith, and that Government had deceived the people." In another Division the original assessment was accepted with a pretty good grace, from its comparative lightness, and because "the people were under the belief that the tax they were paying was for one year only." The additional burden however in the latter part of the year was "looked upon with hatred." Similar witness is borne by a native collector, who asserts that the one per cent. tax of 1869 was "very little opposed by the assesseses, but its subsequent enhancement shook their faith in the assessors, and they strenuously opposed last year's tax." The frequent change in the rate naturally enhanced the popular vexation. As one of the reporting officers points out, it would be far better to enforce even a moderately high rate for some years, than to have "a fluctuating one accompanied with fresh inquiries, new assessments, and demands of unknown amounts." This indeed has always been felt as a crying evil in connection with the income-tax at home, and whatever hardships a tax of this sort may involve in England, are sure to be greatly embittered and multiplied in India under a foreign rule. If so many people smart under the random blows of Schedule D in this country, how very much greater must the chances of unfair play be in a country where the work of assessment falls inevitably into the hands of underlings, intent on pleasing their masters and filling their own pockets at other people's expense! Mr. Luglis was probably within the mark when he said that for every rupee of income-tax that goes into the Indian Treasury, another rupee is filched by the native assessor.

Mr. Money himself would retain the impost at a low rate, to be drawn from incomes of a higher rating level than the present. But no such compromise appears to be warranted by the facts to which he himself refers. While the lower rating of 1869 brought in about £403,550, the tax of 1870 at 3½ per cent. realised only £653,000, or nearly £200,000 short of the estimated yield. How did this happen? If the yield for the former year was not excessive, that of the next year must have been far too small. But Mr. Money himself asserts that numbers of people who were over-taxed in 1869 quietly paid their six rupees out of an income below Rs 500, under a firm belief that "the tax was the result of a temporary pressure for money, and would cease with the year." When the demand was raised to nearly £2 on incomes of £50 a year, it became worth a poor man's while to dispute his liability; and so it happened that in one district, the 24-Pergunnahs, the proceeds for 1870 were actually smaller than those for the previous year; the number of assesseses having been reduced by two-thirds. A low rate of income-tax reaching only to incomes of Rs. 1,000, and never changed from year to year, might possibly tend, as Mr. Money thinks, to lessen if not disarm the popular ill-will towards the Government. But would it materially lessen the tendency of native underlings to screw as much money as possible, whether for their own or the public use, out of the pockets of their poorer and more helpless countrymen, or the tendency of native landholders to recover their own share of the tax from tenants already perhaps sucked dry by official harpies? In any case it seems to be the poor who suffer in order that a comparatively small addition may be made to the yearly revenues, by means of assessments taken more or less at random on the supposed profits of a man's trade or calling. Is it worth while to keep up so plain a source of chronic irritation all over India for the sake of securing a permanent staff of assessors qualified to suggest and carry out new schemes of local taxation?

Correspondence.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Some little time ago I addressed you on the subject of secret societies in India and the inefficiency of our present police system to cope with them. Since that time we have heard of the Kooka insurrection followed by the offhand execution of sixty-six prisoners, the assassination of Chief Justice Norman, and of Lord Mayo.

In addition to all our other difficulties in India we are now confronted with a new danger. It is a danger to which from our very position in that country we are especially liable. As I before pointed out, in the absence of an efficient detective police force, the Government literally has no means of acquainting itself with what is going on underneath the surface of society. There is reason to believe in the existence of at least one secret society whose ramifications extend over the whole country, and whose operations are conducted so silently, and with such consummate skill as to elude the vigilance of the Government. We are content to remain in ignorance till we are startled by some shocking tragedy which for a few hours occupies attention, and leads to a question being put in the House of Commons, and a few letters in the Times, and there the matter drops. Some valuable life is sacrificed by the dagger of the assassin, the victim is buried with public honours, a successor is appointed, and the event passes out of the public mind. The most diligent care and the most elaborate precautions cannot prevent the recurrence of such events as those we have recently had cause to deplore. When a desperate man is determined to take the life of another, and is prepared to sacrifice his own in the attempt, it is next to impossible to prevent him. Our officials cannot always be watched, they cannot wear armour, they cannot shut themselves up in their houses; and although a body-guard or police, if sufficiently careful, may keep an assassin from coming to close quarters, they are ineffective against a pistol-shot. Government ought not to be content with the capture of an assassin after he has committed the crime, or while he is attempting the commission of it. This is but dealing with the external symptoms of the disease. We ought to search out and remove the cause of those symptoms. The only way to do this is to establish an efficient detective force.

It will be said that the officers at the head of the Executive administration of each district are acquainted, or have the means of making themselves acquainted, with what goes on beneath the surface. But it is not so easy to get this knowledge; it is still less easy to know what use to make of it. There are in India the elements out of which a most excellent detective force might be constructed. Our present police is useless in this respect, and an inefficient detective force is worse than none. There ought to be an organised system with a really efficient man at its head, who should be a member of the Governor General's Executive Council, and in direct communication with the Government. He should be allowed to select his own subordinates, subject of course to confirmation, one of whom—and they should be all picked men—should have under his supervision a district. In some cases, no doubt, this duty might be performed in conjunction with other duties, and a magistrate or deputy-commissioner might discharge them. It is essential that the Independent States should be included in the arrangement and kept under surveillance. This need not be incompatible with the position of those States. It would not be necessary that these officials should be in all cases Englishmen. Some most efficient men might be found in the class called Eurasian. In Independent States it might be found more convenient to employ pretty exclusively the native element, which would be found eminently useful however in British territory also. It should be the business of all these subordinates of whom there might be different grades, to keep up a regular correspondence with one another, and with the head of the intelligence department with the Governor General. I do not advocate the exercise of arbitrary power, nor a system of lettres de cachet. The liberty of the subject as secured by the laws of the land need not be interfered with; I do not want a suspension of the habeas corpus, or what may be tantamount to it in India. The law is quite strong enough, and the Penal Code and Procedure quite Draconian enough for the protection of society. Acts of undue severity, or over hasty procedure, weaken instead of strengthening the Government; if for no other reason, that they betray timidity, and are sure to be appealed against. How much more effect it would have had if Mr. Cowan had retained his prisoners, and tried them before executing them. Even a drum-head court-martial would have been better than nothing. And in the case of the Nawab of Tonk how much greater the moral effect would have been, if instead of condemning him on secret reports written behind his back, he had been arraigned before a commission, and in the sight of all India called upon to answer to the charge, allowed to make his defence, and abide the issue of the trial.

But a detective system or an Intelligence Department such as I advocate does not involve any breach of the recognised principles of law and justice. It would simply supply what in Oriental history is familiar to us under the metaphor, the eyes of the sovereign. The British rule in India, unlike other Oriental despotism, is without eyes. And one consequence of this is, that knowing nothing of what is going on in the country it is liable to rude and sudden shocks, under the effects of which, irritated and angry, it behaves in an undignified manner, and acts with undue severity, and at times great injustice. It behaves like a blind man irritated by a blow dealt by an unseen assailant, who seizes his crutch and lays about him right and left indiscriminately. Had he been able to see what was coming he would have avoided the attack, and if not able to do that, have seized the assailant, and administered the due amount of castigation on the right person.

A properly organised Intelligence Department with its ramifications extending all over India, and the supervision and control vested in one head, is almost necessary for the security of the British Government. If that necessity is not recognised now, I am quite sure the time will come when it will be.

The best possible material exists in India for constructing the machinery of such a department as I have sketched out; and in Colonel Hervey, the head of the Thuggee and Dacoitee Department, the Government have at hand as good a man as they could wish for to organise and supervise it.—Yours faithfully,
I. T. P.

OUR INDIAN NATIVE RULERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR,—An old and trite saying has it that "there is nothing like consistency." It would be well if it were more steadily borne in mind, and applied not only when and where it suits our several purposes, but when and where it does not suit our several views, as entertained at different times, and on different, though not differing, occasions. Permit me to apply the saying with reference to a remark of your own in your issue of the 4th instant.

It was made one especial case during the great rebellion of 1857 (and that actually at the very time that deserters from the army of the Maharaja of Cashmere were being enlisted into the new regiments then forming in various parts of the Punjab, under the energetic action of Sir John Lawrence), against the ruler of that territory that he had permitted sundry mutineers to take up their residence in remote corners of his possessions, and alleged that if he were a true friend of the British Government he would at once have arrested and deported them.

A serious combination that might, if not promptly repressed, have culminated into something not pleasant to think of in these days when it is the fashion to talk of the popularity of British as compared with native rule, arises in 1871, and the following are the terms in which you reflect on the measures adopted by the several Sikh Princes, and especially by the Maharajah of Cashmere:—"In Patiala, Jheend and Nabha a regular clearance has been made of Kukas in the public service, and it is said that Kuka artisans have been driven in numbers out of these States. In Cashmere the Maharajah has followed up his previous expulsion of several hundred Kukas from his army by an order to seize and deport to Jamu every man of that obnoxious sect. What he intends to do with these unfortunates when thus collected we have yet to learn. It is hardly to be supposed that the Indian Government can have lent its sanction to proceedings of this high-handed character."

Please to remember that many, perhaps most, of these men now being, in your opinion, so harshly treated have gone into Cashmere territory to proselytise and probably organise operations of a character hostile to the British Government, and also that in 1857 Sir John Lawrence resorted to an exactly similar "high-handed" measure by collecting 1,300 Hindoostanees of all classes (his own Meer Moonshee Bunoo Lall among them) at Lahore, and then deporting them en masse to the country from whence they came, and then tell me what might be said of the Maharajah of Cashmere if he had allowed the disaffected men of the present day to find an asylum in his states, and seize on some future opportunity to work their wicked will on some of our peaceful subjects on the border? You will, I am sure, with your well-known candour, admit that, smarting under a previous imputation and with such an example before him, the Maharajah could not do less than he has done, and that if he had not resorted to these summary measures there are those who would have been too happy to seize on the opportunity of blackening his Highness's face, for, as they would say, harbouring our enemies in his territory.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE LATE VICEROY.

The Friend of India admits that if statesmanship consists in speeches Lord Mayo was no statesman. He had not the gift of prating. It was curious to watch him in the Council. How patiently, impartially, and candidly he listened, never showing any leaning to any side till he found some cobweb of hypocrisy or false statesmanship—some sham thing—torn to tatters, and then he could smile a little, and move in his chair with manifest pleasure, for he hated sham. He came after Sir John Lawrence's starch and stiffness, and had to fight a battle for geniality. But he won—gloriously; and he died beloved by us all. He was not of the men who walk on stilts, and look wise, and affect an ominous silence, and try to build up their own position by setting down their subordinates. Not he. Nobody served Lord Mayo, and had to say—"Yes, you see he took the praise of my work to himself." No, he never did that—be the worker saint or sinner. He never "ran down" the men who had served him, but helped them where he could, and so kindly that he enhanced the favours a hundred fold. Reader, we have lost no common man in losing Lord Mayo! He did not seem so great—no great man ever does, it is your noodles who generally seem the greatest—but we would have matched his common-sense and clear sight against all the "genius" in India. Look at his Foreign Policy. From the days of Akbar there has not been a man who saw more of India as a whole, who tried to enter more into the feelings of the people, who strove more truly to take the high ground in politics, who more earnestly endeavoured to lead the people to do what they could for themselves. We may live to see many Viceroys. We may see great men yet at the helm of this great Empire (and if we mean to keep it we must have great men), but we never shall see a man more liked by all who came in contact with him, or who strove more earnestly to be the friend of all than Lord Mayo.

The Indian Daily News holds that many months will elapse before India, recovering gradually from the effects of the social and political loss which she is called on to endure to-day, will calmly estimate the solid worth of the man whose cheery voice will be heard amongst us no more. In the meantime, no more eloquent tribute could be offered to the memory of the murdered Viceroy than the heavy gloom which hangs on our spirits to-day, uniting us all in one great grief, and in an earnest sympathy with the desolate lady to whom the death of the Viceroy means more than it means to any of us all. We desire to weigh our words well, before intruding on domestic sorrow; but when the Gazette itself tells us that "those who were honoured by the Earl of Mayo's friendship, and especially those whose pride it was to be associated with him in public affairs, have sustained a loss of which they cannot trust themselves to speak, we need have no hesitation in assuring her, to whom his death means infinitely more than it can mean to any of these, that thousands of English hearts are bowed down with sorrow at her loss—in a hearty sympathy of which she may well be proud, when the first bitterness of her grief is overpast.

The Pioneer remarks that if another Mutiny had burst upon us the event would, doubtless, have involved more serious consequences, but we think the news would have caused less regret, less of that pain which is produced by a personal misfortune. There is no one in India that ever came into personal relation with Lord Mayo who will not feel a cloud upon his spirits on hearing that that genial and gracious presence had passed from off the earth. Lord Mayo was one of those favourites of nature whose manner is credited to them as a virtue, who can win a partizan with a smile, and make a life-long well-wisher by two minutes' kind and pleasant talk. There is much of the feeling, too, which so intensified the anxiety of the English people during the late danger of the Prince of Wales—the sudden juxtaposition in the mind, without transition, of the highest prosperity with a painful death, to aggravate the shock we experience at our Viceroy's murder. He was blasted by lightning from a clear sky. But beyond the personal affection, or at least the prepossession and good will, which Lord Mayo, above all the Governors-General who have ever ruled India, had the gift of inspiring, there is a sense of no inconsiderable public loss to make us deplore this calamitous voyage to Burmah and the Islands, from which we were justified in expecting so much public advantage. Though perhaps not in the rank of our "great" Governors-General, Lord Mayo was certainly superior to the larger number, and he applied a more than ordinary capacity to the public service with quite extraordinary diligence.

The Madras Times feels that the world has lost a good man, and the State a wise councillor. Lord Mayo came to this country pursued by a whirlwind of adverse criticism. The Home Press ridiculed his appointment in the most thorough manner, and it is in the face of a whole sea of prejudice that he has achieved the reputation of being a good Governor-General. No doubt his personal manner did a great deal to clear away the prejudices that had been excited against him. Many who met Lord Mayo when he visited Madras three years ago, on his way to take up his appointment, will agree with us that there was a singular charm in the mixture of frankness and dignity that was the leading trait of his manner. He was essentially a manly man; and this manliness showed itself in his political as well as his private life. That confession of financial confusion and blundering which marked an early period of his government was a frank and manly thing to do; and the country has probably profited more than any one will ever know from the act. A less manly Viceroy would have concealed the real state of matters, as is the habit of statesmen, to avoid the temporary discredit that in consequence fell on his government. We have, of course, had occasion to differ from Lord Mayo's policy; but it has rather been in details than in principle. The policy of retrenchment which he inaugurated, and so largely carried out, was on the whole a wise policy. Individual economies might seem to be purchased dearly; but increased economy was absolutely necessary for the well-being of the country, and it imposed upon Lord Mayo an arduous and most disagreeable task, which he performed with as little injury to individuals as was consistent with the condition of things.

OUR SOVEREIGN LADY.

The Times of India considers the Queen's Speech bland, colourless, and conventional as usual; but with what a grateful sense of relief it will be perused wherever waves the British flag! Its opening paragraph suitably anticipates the first thought with which this annual greeting will be everywhere welcomed. The prominent reference made to the kidnapping practices in Polynesia and the incipient slave trade of Queensland may be regarded as sincere homage to the anti-slavery principles which the British Government has so consistently upheld, but as India is giving no uneasiness, her Majesty is not allowed to bestow a word upon our affairs. One might have thought it would have been worth while to remark that the stability of British power in India had just received signal illustration by the instant and utter failure of an insurrectionary outbreak amongst the most warlike race of the peninsula. But no: Scotch schools, and the San Juan dispute are more worthy of note at St. Stephen's than the affairs of an empire which trains, employs, and pays 100,000 Englishmen—secures to England more profitable commerce than all her colonies—and enables her to keep the position of a first-class political Power.

POLITICAL AGENTS AND THE RAJAHS.

The Sumsher Bahadur has heard several instances of unlimited sway enjoyed by the Political Agents over Native Thakores, but is indeed sorry to see that the time has arrived for native princes to submit even to the underlings of the Agents. Though the British Government show their anxiety to keep these princes in political equality with themselves, and profess their utmost desire not to interfere with their doings, the Political Agents exercise an arbitrary conduct, to which the rajahs submit, thinking it to be emanating from the British Government themselves. It has become a general rule that any official of the Rajah should be of the British Political department's choice. If unfortunately any member of the Rajah's kutcheree comes across the will of the Political Agent, he is very likely to lose his place. No attempt even to accuse him in any way is made, as the unfortunate fellow can be transported beyond the precincts of the State in the twinkling of an eye. This state of things of course necessitates a dependent kind of administration. We would recommend the rajahs (who may be thus oppressed) to apply at once to the East India Association for redress.

THE NORMAN-BALFOUR CONTROVERSY.

The Times of India taking advantage of General Norman's admission that he could publish official documents, Sir George stands by his "Minute," and makes the following quotation from it, para. (53), which he says General Norman had quite overlooked: "The cost of provisions for European troops had been much reduced in Bengal in the last four years notwithstanding the great rise in prices;" "which," continues Sir George "unmistakably shows, that it was not the rise in prices (as now maintained by General Norman) over which he considered administrative control to be powerless." But a quotation to be of value must be complete in itself, and it is with astonishment, an astonishment that we doubt not will be shared in by the public here and at home, to find that a military officer of such long standing, and one who has held such high and responsible offices in the Military Department of the Indian Government and the War-office at home, should have condescended to the ignoble subterfuge of stopping short in his quotation, precisely at that point at which to elucidate the subject in dispute he was bound to go on. If Sir George Balfour has no respect for his own character as a fair and honourable disputant, if Sir George Balfour has no regard for what is termed "common honesty" in official correspondence, simple justice to General Norman, and to the Government of India, should have compelled him to add the concluding words of the para., the first half only of which he found it convenient to quote, and which are as follows:—"These results are attributed, and I think correctly, to the effective departmental administration in which bakeries have been established and meat supplied by direct agency in supersession of the contract system." Simple justice to the Indian Commissariat department should have compelled Sir George Balfour not to omit also the concluding sentence of the following para. (54) of this "Minute," in which the late Sir H. Durand says:—"The serious augmentation, however, is owing to the bad years,—the price of provisions at many places at famine rates, the cost of forage, of grain for horses and cattle, and the compensation to Native troops in consequence of the dearth of provisions and forage. Manifestly the Commissariat Department must meet such requirements without being able to exercise any material influence on the market values of grain and other supplies affected by the nature of the seasons. So far as matters were dependent on departmental efficiency, the Commissariat has been vigilant and successful in the reduction of expenditure." In these last lines lies the gist of the whole controversy. It establishes unmistakably that it was the rise in prices Sir H. Durand referred to, and not (as Sir George Balfour still maintains) some thing or any thing else over which we considered administrative control to be powerless; and it leaves Major-General Balfour in the unenviable position of having made statements knowing them to be unfounded, which would seriously damage the character of the Government of which he was himself so long a chosen servant. It is rarely, indeed, that we impugn the motives of any officer of high standing, who comes forward to discharge so laudable a service to the public as to aid us in that support we at all times feel it our duty to give to measures having for their object the observance of a prudent economy in military expenditure. But the proofs in the case are so damning that, notwithstanding Sir George Balfour's disclaimer of all vain boastings, we fear that no honest critic, nay, no disinterested person, who reads his letter in juxtaposition with Sir H. Durand's Minute, can give him credit for being actuated by any higher motive than that of endeavouring to exalt the efficiency of the Indian military administration of which he was himself part, at the expense of that of which he formed no part.

TIGERS.—We have further accounts of the depredations of tigers in this neighbourhood. Since we published the statement of the Tahsildar of Coonoor, in our issue of the 18th ult., we have heard of other casualties from these dangerous animals. A few days since, whilst burning some grass, on Captain Godfrey's estate, in the Ouchterlony valley, a tiger bounded out, killing an old shikaree, for many years in Captain Godfrey's service, and severely wounding another man. In the same neighbourhood, a tiger is reported to have killed a native on Mr. Ouchterlony's estate. To-day's report mentions the destruction of some cattle at Billicul. And the bazaar rumour has it (perhaps as an exaggeration of the foregoing) that three coolies were mauled this week, belonging to the shooting party now enjoying their sport at Peermund. It is also stated that some individual has been mauled on the Coonoor ghaut; but we receive these last statements with caution.—South of India Observer, Feb. 8.

ASSASSINATION OF LORD MAYO.

ARRIVAL AT PORT BLAIR.

A Gazette Extraordinary was issued on the 14th February, from which we extract the following :—

"His Excellency the Viceroy arrived in H.M.'s steam frigate Glasgow at the convict settlement of Port Blair, Andamans, at 9.30 A.M. on Thursday, the 8th of February. Shortly after 11 A.M. his Excellency and the Countess of Mayo, with the Staff and other gentlemen and ladies, landed at Ross, the chief station of the settlement, and were received at the pier by the troops lining the approaches. The Countess of Mayo and the ladies proceeded to the house of the Superintendent, Major-General Stewart, C.B., while the Viceroy and suite, accompanied by General Stewart, visited the convict establishments at this station. His Excellency inspected the Sudr Bazaar, the convict barracks, the Native Infantry lines, the hospitals, the new church, and other public buildings, and was accompanied throughout by a strong guard, both of Native Infantry and police, who closely surrounded his Excellency on either side of and behind the Staff immediately surrounding him. After a short rest at the house of the Superintendent, the Viceroy inspected the barracks of the European troops, and, assisted by Colonel Jervois, R.E., C.B., and Colonel Rundall, R.E., made a minute examination of the foundations and walls of the buildings to ascertain the cause of their having given way shortly after they were built. His Excellency then, attended as before, visited the European Convict Barracks and Library, and returned with the Countess of Mayo and party to her Majesty's ship Glasgow by 2 P.M.

"At 3 P.M. the Viceroy, accompanied by Major-General Stewart, C.B., the Hon. Mr. Ellis, Colonel Jervois, C.B., Mr. G. W. Allen, and the personal staff—Major Burne, private secretary; Captains Lockwood and Gregory, Aides-de-Camp; and Mr. Hawkins, R.N., Flag Lieutenant—left the Glasgow in a steam launch, and, passing the stations of Aberdeen and Haddo, landed at Viper Island. This station is in the inner harbour, about five miles from Ross, and here are detained about 1,300 convicts, including all those who are received from India with the character of being desperate men, and all who, by their bad conduct during their residence in the Settlement, have been proved deserving of specially rigorous treatment. His Excellency was received at the landing place by the officials in charge, and was here, as in Ross, closely attended by a guard of Native Infantry and police. After an inspection of the gaol and other arrangements the Viceroy and party returned to the steam launch and visited Chatham, a station on a small island dividing the inner from the outer harbour. His Excellency, under the escort of a guard of police and the petty officers of the station (there being no Native Infantry on this island), inspected the saw mills and the coaling depot, and then re-embarked in the steam launch, leaving on board the steamer Nemesis, then lying at the coaling station, Captain Gregory, Aide-de-Camp, who had to give orders in anticipation of the proposed departure of the Nemesis early on the following morning."

THE ASSASSINATION.

From Major Burne's private journal, as quoted by the Times correspondent, we thus continue the sad story :—

"The inspection at Chatham Island was over sooner than the party expected, and, as far as the gentlemen who accompanied the Viceroy can recollect, his Excellency himself proposed to Major-General Stewart that they should go over to Hope Town, which was only a short distance across the harbour, in order to visit the Mount. It was then about five o'clock, and as daylight lasted till half-past six or so, there was thought to be sufficient time to complete the visit before dark. The party therefore started at once for Hope Town, and on landing proceeded, after a little delay, to ascend the hill. The Viceroy rode for some few hundred yards on a pony of one of the overseers, but he afterwards got off, preferring to walk. On account of the short delay made at the landing-place the party did not reach the top of the hill till near sunset. Both the Viceroy and the gentlemen accompanying him walked fast and were somewhat tired. They all sat down for about ten minutes at Major-General Stewart's country house, to rest and look at the view. The Viceroy drank a little water, and appeared to enjoy the trip exceedingly, frequently expressing his admiration of the beauty of the view, which, he said, was the most lovely he had ever seen. After resting themselves the party rose to return down the hill. They were all in good spirits, and nothing occurred on the way down, except the circumstance of a few convicts on Mount Harriett presenting petitions, which they were ordered to send in to the Superintendent. There were not many convicts about, all being engaged in their houses and in work off the road. As the party proceeded down the hill they kept well together, close behind the Viceroy, with the guard on either side, and in rear, as had been the case during the day. There was no reason, however, to take any very special precaution in this locality, as the few convicts on Mount Harriett were composed of the best characters. On the party approaching the landing place it began to get very dark. The convict authorities sent up a few torches to light them on their way, but the Viceroy ordered the torchbearers to keep well to the front, as he disliked the smell and smoke. On reaching the huts near the landing place, a line of men were observed drawn up on the left of the Viceroy and his party under some convict overseers. These, Major-General Stewart explained, were bearers of Major-General Stewart's, whom he had selected and ordered over from Ross Island to carry the Countess of Mayo and her party up the hill the following morning. The Viceroy and his party passed this line of men at about a quarter to seven, and immediately afterwards reached the pier, which was a narrow one, with somewhat steep stone sides. When within about fifteen yards of the boat, Major-General Stewart, with the Viceroy's permission, momentarily left his side to speak to one of the European overseers, standing by, with reference to some arrangements of the following morning. It was now quite dark. I was at that moment walking some paces to the left of the Viceroy; the armed escort was close to him on either side, and the remainder of the police and Jemadars followed in the rear. Colonel Jervois, Lieutenant Hawkins, R.A., and the Viceroy's Jemadar were the nearest to him in the rear, while the rest of the party were all following up at some paces distance. A few of the sailors of the Glasgow were sitting and talking at the end of the pier. The Viceroy, in order to reach the boat, took a few longer steps forward than usual, when, in an instant, a rushing noise was heard, and a man was seen fastened like a tiger on the Viceroy's back. The whole occurrence was momentary, and took place almost in total darkness. The assassin, who was a tall, muscular Khyberree Afredee, seemed to have the Viceroy in some manner immovably in his grasp, and inflicted the wound so instantaneously as not to give him time to turn round and defend himself. The whole party rushed on the assassin and instantly secured him; alas, not till he had inflicted two mortal wounds. The Viceroy ran a few paces forward, turned to his left, and fell over the pier into some shallow water. I left the assassin, and immediately ran to his Excellency's help while struggling in the water, and assisted him out. After conveying him to the steam launch they made all haste to get to the Glasgow. It was a dreadful twenty minutes of agony for all present. Although none of the party could at the moment form any idea of the nature of the wounds they saw a marked and alarming change come over his face after they had lifted him into the boat.

"Mr. Hawkins, Captain Lockwood, and Major-General Stewart supported the Viceroy's head, while I assisted the jemadar, rubbed his legs, and endeavoured to keep up warmth. Others watched the wounds, in order to stop further flow of blood, while all eagerly urged the sailors to press on with haste to the ship. Every moment was of value. We all imagined that the Viceroy had fainted from loss of blood, and we would have given our lives for a little brandy for him. But during these dreadful moments, on nearing the ship, Major-General Stewart turned to me, shook his head, and said, 'I fear the worst.' The Viceroy's face had changed, but none of us thought he had actually breathed his last. He had not given one sigh or expression of pain from first to last, but he must have expired at the moment of Major-General Stewart's exclamation.

"At a late hour of the night the medical officers of the Glasgow and Dr. Barnett, the Viceroy's surgeon, made an examination of the body. It was found that two wounds had been inflicted. One incised wound, about an inch and a half long, was situated at the lower part of the right shoulder-blade. On examination the wound was found to penetrate the chest, close to the spine. The other wound was of the same extent, and apparently inflicted by the same instrument. It was about an inch and a half above the left shoulder-blade, and passed directly downwards into the cavity of the chest. Either wound was sufficient to cause death. During the necessary examination a large quantity of blood flowed from both wounds, showing that great internal hæmorrhage had previously taken place.

"The assassin was brought on board the Glasgow the same night, half insensible from the blows he had received. He was placed under a guard of Marines. Mr. Aitchison and Mr. Eden spoke to him on board, and in reply to their questions he acknowledged being a Mussulman Pathan from beyond Peshawar, that his name was Shere Ali, and that he had done the deed by the order of God. He declared that he had no associate in the crime, but that God was his Shurreff, or partner. The whole of the following day, the 9th, was occupied in the examination of witnesses by the Deputy Superintendent, and the trial of the assassin by Major-General Stewart. No facts of importance were elicited, except that the evidence tended to prove that the prisoner rushed up from the right rear, from behind some large boulders, where he had concealed himself.

"On being called upon for his defence at the trial the assassin stated that he had nothing to say further than that the Judge had heard the evidence and might decide as he wished. The prisoner, addressing Major-General Stewart, added :—'You have made the inquiry and know all about it. When asked last night whether I committed the deed, I said, God knows. In the next world the account will be made up and you will then know.' The prisoner was also understood to say that he would not make any further statement at present, as he did not wish to appear to escape hanging, or beg for his life, but that on the day of his execution he would make a statement to the Superintendent, if present, or to the hang-

The inquiry and trial of the assassin occupied nearly the whole of the 9th. During the course of the morning the screw steamer left Dacca for Calcutta with the letters and telegrams in charge of Mr. Ellis.

THE POST-MORTEM INQUIRY.

The following is the report of the post-mortem examination:—

"We, the undersigned, record the result of a post-mortem examination on the body of his Excellency the Viceroy, and Earl of Mayo, on the evening of the 8th inst., at Port Blair, Andaman Islands, on board her Majesty's ship Glasgow.

"When we saw him he was quite dead. The examination was made in the Viceroy's cabin, about a quarter of an hour after the body was brought on board.

"We have made a most careful examination of the wounds inflicted. There were two wounds; one incised wound, about 1½ inch long, extending obliquely from above downwards and inwards to the spine, was situated behind lower third of posterior margin of right scapula.

"On examination, the finger passed in direction of spine, and impinged upon a deep indentation, apparently on a rib.

"On passing a probe along the finger, it was found to penetrate deeply into cavity of chest. During the necessary examination, a large quantity of blood flowed from this wound.

"A second incised wound, of the same extent as the one above described, and apparently inflicted by the same instrument, was situated about 1½ inch above superior angle of left scapula, and passed directly downwards into the cavity of chest, slightly splintering superior angle of scapula, and indenting either first rib or transverse process of a cervical vertebra. In this case also a probe passed along the finger in the wound penetrated deeply into cavity of chest, and a large quantity of dark blood flowed from this wound also. Either wound was sufficient to cause death.

"We would also state that the back of the clothes worn by his Excellency were completely saturated with blood."

This is signed by William Loney, Staff surgeon, R.N.; Oliver Barnett, Staff Surgeon, Surgeon to the Viceroy; Robert H. More, Assistant-surgeon, R.N. The examination is certified as being conducted in the presence of Mr. Ellis, Mr. Eden, Mr. Aitchison, and Major Burns.

RECEPTION OF THE VICEROY'S REMAINS.

Yesterday we received a long telegram supplied specially for this journal, describing the order observed at Calcutta in the mournful ceremony of receiving the remains of the late Viceroy and escorting them to their first resting-place on land—the Marble Hall in Government House, Calcutta.

A deputation from the Government of India, consisting of the Hon. B. H. Ellis and General Norman, with all the Secretaries, proceeded down the river to meet the remains. At Prinsep's Ghaut the procession formed—the leaders being the Hon. Mr. Strachey, Acting Governor-General; Commander-in-Chief of H.M.'s Forces in India, Lord Napier of Magdala; the Hon. Sir Richard Couch, Chief Justice; Roman Catholic Bishop; and other ordinary members of Council. Then came the body, borne on a gun-carriage, or other military bier, with the aides-de-camp, body guard, officers, and Private Secretary as pall bearers. The chief mourners immediately followed these, being the Hons. Robert, Terence, and Major Bourke, who, as was the case with many more, were visibly affected. All other dignitaries and officials of the city joined in with the procession, also large numbers of the inhabitants, natives as well as Europeans. Those in the procession were clothed in black, and walked bare-headed. There was an immense concourse of spectators, at least twenty thousand persons being in the streets. The troops, some in the procession and others lining the route, were of Europeans, the 14th and 107th Foot; of Native Infantry, the 8th, 10th, and 13th. There were also two batteries of Artillery and the body guard. The body was taken into the throne room, which was draped in black. There the appropriate portions of the prayers were read in the presence of Lady Mayo, the other members of the family, and the chief dignitaries. Bishop Milman had not arrived. Thus closed a most imposing national ceremony, which the youngest who witnessed it will never forget. Nothing occurred to interfere with the solemnity and impressiveness of this ever memorable Saturday in Calcutta.—Times of India, Feb. 19.

Miscellaneous.

MARY WINCHESTER.—The Commissioner of Chittagong brought this little girl with him on his return to the station from his tour of inspection in the hill tracts. She appears to be a smart and intelligent child of about seven years of age; and from the contour of her features evidently of European extraction, although slightly bronzed owing to her long stay in the hills. The Howlongs in whose hands she was for about a year seem to have taken particular care of her, as she was in good health and spirits, although at the moment of parting with her savage entertainers she cried bitterly, a lament which they fully reciprocated in their own barbarous manner. The civil authorities have been unable to gain any information from her, as she only understands the Kookie language, and all the interpreters are absent with the column. She will be sent to Calcutta by the first opportunity.—Bengal Times.

AFGHANISTAN.—The Ameer, we again read, contemplates deputing his Commander-in-Chief, General Daud Shah, and some selected Afghan officers of all arms to Peshawur, to study all the details of British military discipline, with a view to a thorough reorganisation of his army on the European system. All words of command and military designations, however, will be given in the Afghan tongue; and army manuals are being printed in that language.

PUNJAB RAILWAY.—General Abbott, the Agent of the Punjab Railway, has resigned, and will go home on the expiry of the usual six months' notice. Our Lahore contemporary adds:—"It is premature in the absence of anything like a published reason for his resignation at the present juncture to venture a criticism on the causes that led the General to take this serious and important step. But in justice to him these reasons will probably be fully published by the company he has so faithfully served."

THE TAJ AT AGRA.—We have seen a beautiful picture, just issued, being a copy of a chromo-lithograph of the Taj, from a drawing by Mr. Walter Paris, late of Bombay. For correctness in outline and detail, and for beautiful colouring, this artistic production can hardly be over-rated. Mr. Paris, we believe, intends that this shall be the first of a series representing some of the principal Mosques and Tombs which are the attraction of travellers in the North-West Provinces. In the picture under notice, we have a specimen that must add greatly to his professional repute; and we trust that the sale will be such as to determine the issue of the series contemplated.—Times of India.

MILITARY.—We have heard on good authority that Rawul Pindee is to be made the Head-Quarters of the Royal Horse Artillery in the Punjab, and that in consequence the Field Battery quartered there will be removed to Peshawur. This will fall rather hard on D-16th R. A., as it will have been just five months under canvas between the time it left Allahabad and its arrival at Pindee; then, after passing the hot season at the latter station, it will march to Peshawur, and in the following cold season have to come all the way back again to Bombay to embark for England! The absurdity of the brigade system could not be more clearly illustrated—the Head-Quarters and one battery at Barrackpore, and another battery at Peshawur, 1,500 miles apart, and supposed to be under the same commanding officer!

KABUL KHEL WAZIRIS.—A treaty, the Pioneer tells us, has been concluded with the Saifali section of the Kabul Khel Waziris inhabiting the independent hills to the westward of Bunnoo Thull, by which these hitherto intractable mountaineers bind themselves not only to maintain friendly relations with us themselves, but to assist in the suppression of crime within their boundaries, for the performance of their promises the chiefs of the tribe holding themselves responsible.—"Whereas certain persons of our tribe used, for the purposes of trade, to purchase, at cheap rates, stolen property belonging to British subjects, and for that reason our tribe was under the displeasure of, and criminal in the eyes of, the British Government, therefore, to get pardon for our former misdeeds, we, being the heads of our tribe, according to the custom of the 'Nanawat,' or otherwise throwing ourselves on its mercy, have brought forty sheep, of the value of Rs. 200, by way of peace-offering, and ten camels, value Rs. 800, having been stole from British territory, and which were with us, and we pray that this peace-offering and fine be accepted, and we be forgiven, and for the future we agree to the imposed terms."

THE "DACCA'S" RUN FROM THE ANDAMANS.—The s.s. Dacca seems to have made a very rapid run from the Andamans; having left Port Blair at midday on the ninth, she reached Saugor Point at daybreak on the 12th, an average between eleven and twelve knots, with a strongish head-wind against her for the first ten or twelve hours. She intercepted the Lieutenant-Governor's yacht and the Celerity at Mud Point, on their way to False Point, and brought Mr. Campbell back to Calcutta. There arrived by her, besides, the Hon. B. H. Ellis, the Hon. Ashley Eden, Captain Lockwood, A.D.C., Colonel, Mrs. and the two Misses Thuillier, Mrs. Rundall, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Halsey, Count Von Waldstein, Mr. and Mrs. Horace Cockerell, and Mr. Allen. Lord Mayo's guests on the Dacca, ere leaving the ship, presented her commander, Captain Paterson, with a silver bowl, in token of their respect and high appreciation of his care and courtesy. The Marquis and Marchioness of Drogheda, and Mr. and Mrs. Eustace Smith, left Port Blair for Madras, with Mr. Aitchison, en route to England. On board the Glasgow were Lady Mayo, Major and the Hon. Mrs. Burne, Dr. and Mrs. Barnett, Captains de Robeck and Gregory, A.D.C., Miss Milman, Miss Norman, Colonel Jervois, and Lord Donoughmore.—Pioneer.

THE FUNERAL OF ADMIRAL COCKBURN.—The funeral cortege of Rear-Admiral J. H. Cockburn, Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's Naval Forces in the East Indies, left Government House yesterday afternoon at four o'clock for the military cemetery at Bhowanipore. The funeral procession consisted of two batteries of Royal Horse Artillery, H.M.'s 1-14th and 107th Regiments of Foot, and 13th Regiment Native Infantry, under the command of the Brigadier-General of the Presidency. The remains of the late admiral were conveyed on a gun-carriage, the Union Jack forming a pall, on which were placed the hat and sword of the deceased. The procession formed in the following order:—Advance Guard—Native Cavalry; 13th Regiment N.I.; H.M.'s 1-14th Regiment of Foot; H.M.'s 107th Regiment of Foot; two batteries of Artillery; bands of 1-14th and 107th Regiment; coffin on gun carriage; seamen and marines of H.M.S. Daphne; petty officers H.M.S. Daphne; chief mourners—Captain Adams, H.M.S. Daphne, Mr. Bethune, and Mr. Harris, Secretary R.N.; pall-bearers—officers of H.M.S. Daphne; Viceregal Body-guard. The cortege proceeded slowly along the Ellenborough Course, lined on either side by large numbers of spectators. On reaching the burial-ground the funeral service was read by the Rev. Mr. Stephenson, chaplain of St. John's. The field battery fired a salute over the grave. This salute was taken up by the fort, thirteen minute guns being fired from the ramparts, as well as from H.M.S. Daphne, lying in the river. During the ceremony the flag of the fort was hoisted half-mast high.—Englishman, Feb. 12.

CONVICTS AT THE ANDAMANS.

On the 27th December last we (Madras Mail) published a letter addressed to us by a gentleman who visited Port Blair early in that month. That letter contained the following passages, which, taken in connection with Lord Mayo's assassination, are now probably significant of the need of reform in the administration of the Settlement:—

"On the Settlement Island, known as Ross Island, live the Superintendent and several of his subordinate officers, and with them the officer commanding the troops, the commissariat officer, and his department, together with all the Government clerks and three thousand convicts, besides a company of European infantry, and a portion of a wing of a native regiment which is quartered at Port Blair. There is therefore no lack of inhabitants on the little island. I found on landing that I was being rowed ashore in a boat manned entirely by convicted murderers. The idea was not pleasant, but I was assured that there was no danger, and that they were all uncommonly good fellows (such I argued is the result of proximity to vice). I however got safely ashore and lived to return, which proves, at least, that murderers are to be trusted to a certain extent. There is a bazaar, which appeared to be thriving in point of trade, and the owners of shops seem to have no delicacy in acknowledging to any amount of crime (quite a new phase of life); one, for instance, admitted that he had committed a forgery in Bombay Bank shares, another that he was a murderer, and so on; while a third would admit his weakness had him in taking his without lawful provocation. These gentlemen were living in great comfort, and seemed to be amassing wealth. The enthusiasm of my guide, who was one of the Port Blair officials, seemed to know no bounds for those interesting delinquents. I was given to understand that there were only six free servants on the island, the rest being convicts.

"To return to the convicts. There are, I believe, about 8,000 of them, some quartered on Ross Island, who are those who have been selected for good behaviour, and are ticket-of-leave people. They are allowed to roam about the island free, and are under no restraint whatever, except that they have to answer to their names on the first of each month. Some of them have shops which seem to be flourishing, and they are evidently keeping pace with the times, for at the entrances to a shop, on the signboard, was a most elaborate picture of the meeting of the Emperors of the French and Czar Nicholas at Sedan, showing that that great historical event was known even at the Andamans. On the "mainland" is another convict settlement called Aberdeen, and a third one is at Viper Island, situated about three miles up the lagoon at the mouth of which Ross Island lies. On Viper Island there is a convict jail, and there our troublesome friends are kept in irons and at hard labour; and this jail is the rod of terror that is held over the head of these convicts whose good behaviour has purchased for them the comparative freedom of Ross Island. Any misbehaviour brings down upon them a certain term of Viper Island, according to the gravity of the fault. Nobody pays for labour in money on the Andamans, but each free inhabitant (European) is entitled to draw three gubans of rum for his own consumption per month (of course this privilege is not extended to soldiers), and all convict labour is paid for in rum. A convict rows you across the bay, or carries your carpet bag, or does any errand—he receives a glass of rum in turn, which, by the way, you will observe, is a very excellent plan for encouraging a habit of dram drinking among those whom we purpose, at the close of a limited number of years, to let loose on Indian society once more. It however cheapens labour to the free inhabitants, and so, of course, it is all right."

THE LATE PROFESSOR OF SANSKRIT AT MADRAS.—A woful penalty, we read in the Madras Mail, has been paid by Mr. Pickford, late Professor in the Presidency College, for his mastery of Sanskrit, for he has lost the sight of one eye, and is caused much anxiety for the safety of the other. Under these melancholy circumstances he was compelled to resign his Sanskrit Professorship in Madras.

LIEUTENANT MONEY-KYRLE.—We are glad to hear that the result of the publicity we have given to the case of Lieutenant Money-Kyrle, of the 2-21st Fusiliers, is that yesterday morning he was released from arrest, and had his sword and sash returned to him by the Adjutant of the regiment. The following were the charges preferred against him:—1st Charge.—For having made false statements, respecting Assistant Surgeon Walsh's having visited him, when sick (in a letter to the Adjutant of the Left Wing 2-21st Fusiliers, 27th November, 1871), and respecting the circumstance of his removal from his quarters to the Regimental Hospital. 2nd Charge.—For having feigned sickness and ill-health, thereby avoiding his military duties. 3rd Charge.—For having made false statements to Assistant Surgeon Walsh and to the Commanding Officer of the Wing, respecting his being or not being on duty, when he applied to be placed upon the sick report on the 16th of November, 1871. It has not been thought necessary to have either a Court of Enquiry or a Court-martial on this young officer. And after being under arrest for more than ten weeks, he is released without having had a chance of refuting these charges.—Madras Times.

LORD NAPIER'S CASE.—The case of the Right Hon. Francis Baron Napier v. the Madras Advertising and Printing Company, Limited, came on for hearing at the High Court this morning before Mr. Justice Holloway and Mr. Justice Kernan. The Advocate-General appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. Miller for the defendants. The Advocate-General opened the case for the plaintiff, and called Mr. Brockman, editor of the Athenæum, who said that the articles complained of were not written by him, but had passed under his supervision as editor. He said he had been turned out of the police by Lord Napier's Government on a reduction of the force; but Lord Napier had since offered him an appointment, and he had much to thank his Lordship for. His Lordship, in cross-examination, contended that the letter of General McCleverty regarding the insubordination of the 19th N.I., though marked private, was of such importance as called for the action of Government; and that it was not intended for the exclusive personal use of his Lordship, but for the consideration of Government; that the Commander-in-Chief sent off the regiment to the Straits, after its insubordination, on his responsibility, without making any communication, verbal or otherwise, to Government. A verdict has been given in favour of the plaintiff, with damages amounting to Rs. 2,000 and costs. Lord Napier and the Editor of the Athenæum were the only witnesses called.—Times of India, Feb. 19.

LETTER OF CONDOLENCE FROM BROACH TO LADY MAYO.

At a meeting of the inhabitants of Broach, both European and native, convened at the instance of the local association, on Feb. 15, it was unanimously resolved to forward a letter of condolence to Lady Mayo, through his Excellency the Governor of Bombay. The following is a copy of the letter, together with that of one to Sir Seymour Fitzgerald:—

To the Right Hon. Sir W. R. S. V. Fitzgerald, G.C.S.I., Governor in Council, Bombay.

Your Excellency,—In submitting herewith a letter of condolence adopted by the inhabitants of this town at a public meeting held at Broach on the 15th inst., I am directed to request your Excellency's Government to oblige us by transmitting it to the disconsolate Countess of Mayo, to whom it is addressed.—I beg to remain your Excellency's most obedient servant,

SORABSHA DADABHAI,
Broach, Feb. 16, 1872. Hon. Sec. Broach Association.

To the Countess of Mayo, the beloved relict of one of the noblest and best of the Governors general of India, Calcutta.

OUR LADY,—We, the undersigned inhabitants of Broach, beg to approach your ladyship with sad and almost broken hearts in this your greatest and severest trial; and to offer our humble but sincere and heartfelt sympathy and condolence in this the hour of your great sorrow, in which we participate to an extent, of which the brevity of this letter is no measure.

While taking this early and hasty opportunity of wishing that "He who (in the words of the Bible) tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," may watch over and always protect you, we cannot but suppress our disgust and deep indignation at the horrible deed which has brought sorrow to all our loyal hearts.

We cannot conclude this letter without bearing testimony to the high and valuable services rendered to this great country by the dear departed Viceroy, nor without expressing our great surprise and sorrow that he should have been struck down by one of a section of the community to ameliorate whose condition Lord Mayo was so particularly solicitous. This, our Lady, appears like base ingratitude, for which the perpetrator will suffer, but his punishment would be but a poor consolation to your Ladyship, and one highly incommensurate with the enormity of the offence.—We beg to remain, our Countess, your Ladyship's most obedient servants,

Broach, Guzerat, Feb. 15, 1872.

PUBLIC SORROW FOR LORD MAYO.

The dreadful murder of the representative of her Majesty the Queen has filled Bombay with sorrow and indignation. The event is the topic of every tongue. Some say that it is the work of a Mussulman scoundrel isolated from every respectable member of native society, and has no political meaning; others shake their heads, and ask why a convict, who could not reasonably be supposed to have any personal animosity towards Lord Mayo, should have committed a deed so infamous. The murder of Acting Chief Justice Norman is noticed by everybody as a coincidence; it is too similar in its details to the murder of our Viceroy to escape a new and painful attention—both were stabbed in the back, both were killed by a Mussulman, both were men high in position in the country. So far as we have been able to gather, most people think that there is something political at the bottom of this awful crime. There is a gloom over the town, and the future is vaguely hinted at. Yet there is no fear; if the matter is alluded to it is not with trembling. But there is determination—plenty of it; there is a conviction that there is a duty of retribution to perform which will be firmly done; hot bloods also think that milk-and-water philanthropy has had its day, and that the vipers must be scotched who are emanating from their nest in the north of our Indian Empire. Apart from the political appearance of the deed, people do not forget the sympathy that is due from man to man. Lord Mayo's death is lamented for his own and his family's sake. He was generous and genial, and apparently had in him many years of usefulness; and those who knew him as a man, and those who have heard of him as a man, join in lamenting his assassination. Lady Mayo is sincerely pitied. In the morning at sunrise, forty-nine minute guns were fired from the saluting battery, and to many this was the first intimation that some great catastrophe had happened. In the harbour all the ships carried their flags half-mast high. On shore the bell of the Scotch church tolled sadly from time to time. The Parsee merchants closed their shops and ceased from business. In the forenoon, the Chamber of Commerce and the Trades Protection Society issued circulars to the European firms, and in accordance with them the principal houses were closed and will continue to be so to-day. A circular was issued, too, by the Ratepayers' Committee asking all the natives to shut up their offices and shops as a mark of respect to the deceased Lord Mayo, and this many of them did. In the High Court the Chief Justice made a short and dignified speech preparatory to adjourning the Court till to-morrow. The heads of the Small Causes and Police Courts expressed their indignation and regret and suspended proceedings in their Courts. In the dockyard business was carried on as usual, contrary to expectations; probably it will be closed to-day. It is remarkable that most of the Government offices were open, but they also will surely be closed to-day. The Legislative Council did not even meet, as they had resolved to do. Everyone knows that the ball at Government House was put off, and that the Hon. Mr. Sassoon's ball, fixed for to-morrow evening, will not be held until further notice. To-day the banks and the American Consulate will be closed, and the latter will lower its flag. These are a few of the visible signs of respect with which Lord Mayo, as the representative of her Majesty and as a gentleman, was honoured in Bombay. Beneath we give a fuller account of them, merely adding that it must fail to convey an adequate idea of the effect which the Port Blair tragedy has had on the minds of the dwellers in this city.—Bombay Gazette, Feb. 19.

EUROPEAN OFFENDERS.—The Bombay Association have transmitted a petition to the Supreme Legislative Council, on the important subject of the defective state of the law regarding European offenders in the mofussil, praying that the Criminal Procedure Bill be so amended as to invest all the ordinary Criminal Courts throughout the country with jurisdiction to try European British subjects.

Miscellaneous.

DASTARDLY ATTEMPT TO UPSET A TRAIN.—A correspondent writes;—"A dastardly attempt was made to upset a railway train between the Beas and Jundealla stations of the Scinde, Punjab and Delhi Railway on the 1st inst., by placing an iron telegraph post across the line, and fastening it to the rails by means of telegraph wire. It appears that the Government telegraph posts are being removed from the Great Trunk Roads and placed along the line of railway, in order to facilitate inspection of the wires, &c. Materials are therefore laid out on the road for this purpose, and one of these posts was fastened to the rails without being missed by the telegraph people. The Telegraph Inspector was the first to notice the obstruction, but not before he observed the approach of a train, to which he signalled to "pull up." The driver was, however, too near to do so, and on his observing this, he put on full steam with the intention of either crushing or driving the object before him. He succeeded in smashing the post to atoms without any damage whatever being done to his engine, which was, fortunately, drawing a luggage train. The perpetrators of the crime have not been discovered. In the vicinity of the Beas the Kukas are blamed for the attempt."—Bombay Gazette.

DEATH OF MR. BEAUVAIS.—The melancholy duty devolves on us of chronicling the death of one of the oldest residents in Sind, and who, both in the private relations of life and his official position earned the good-will and esteem of all with whom he was thrown in contact—we allude to the late Mr. E. T. Beauvais, Inspecting Postmaster for Sind and the Persian Gulf, who expired on Monday after an illness of some months. Mr. Beauvais had but recently returned from Poona, whither he had proceeded for change of air and scene at the suggestion of his medical adviser; the change does not appear to have benefited him, for he arrived here, we believe, in a very prostrate condition. The loss to the postal department by the demise of the excellent man who has just been taken away from us, will be severely felt, for a more painstaking, zealous, and conscientious official it never had; in this opinion we are borne out by the statement made in an official memorandum by the Postmaster-General of Bombay in 1859, when, in referring to Mr. Beauvais' services during the Mutiny, that officer placed on record the following testimony to Mr. Beauvais' worth:—"He has done better service than most men in India; certainly than any in this department, and is deserving of every reward." For his services during the Mutiny Mr. Beauvais obtained a reward of Rs. 500 from the Government of India, and a medal and clasp for Central India from the Secretary of State for India. The funeral took place last evening, and large numbers followed the remains of the lamented gentleman to their final resting place in the Protestant cemetery in camp.—Sindian, Jan. 31.

TROOPS FROM ENGLAND.—H.M.'s Indian troop-ship Serapis, 4,173 tons, 700-horse power, 3 guns, Commander H. D. Grant, arrived in Bombay harbour on the afternoon of the 17th inst. (four days before the programme time), with troops from England via the Suez Canal. She left Malta on the 29th ult., Port Said on the 3rd, and Suez on the 4th instant. A steamer showing the signals K. H. S. W. sighted on February 14th in lat 16 deg. 10 sec. N., and long. 60 deg. 30 sec. E. name unknown. Asked the Serapis to report her. She brought 55 officers, 23 ladies, and 9 children; 1,068 men, 101 women, and 148 children. She also brought five naval officers from Suez, namely, Sub-Lieuts. F. Finnis, R. C. Bloomfield, T. C. GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

THE LATE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

Fort William, Feb. 12.—The Government of India announces with inexpressible grief that the Viceroy and Governor general of India was assassinated at Port Blair at 7 p.m. on the 8th inst.

The assassin was a convict under sentence of transportation for life. He broke through the guard, and stabbed the Viceroy, as his Excellency was on the point of embarking after inspecting the station.

The country has lost a statesman who discharged the highest duties which her Majesty can entrust to any of her subjects with entire self-devotion, and with abilities equal to the task.

Those who were honoured by the Earl of Mayo's friendship, and especially those whose pride it was to be associated with him in public affairs, have sustained a loss, of which they cannot trust themselves to speak.

The Government of India, therefore, abstains at present from saying anything on this great calamity.

Under the provisions of the Indian Councils Act, Section 50, the office of Viceroy and Governor general devolves upon H.E. the Right. hon. Francis Baron Napier of Merchistoun. Orders will be given in a separate notification as to the marks of respect to be shown to the memory of the Earl of Mayo.

BANQUET TO LORD NORTHBROOK.

On Saturday evening the Mayor of Winchester gave a sumptuous banquet to the Right Hon. Lord Northbrook, as a public expression of the respect and admiration which Hampshire men entertain for his character as a countryman, and of cordial congratulation on his appointment as Viceroy and Governor-General of India.

The entertainment was given in St. John's Rooms, which were handsomely decorated for the occasion.

The Mayor of Winchester (Mr. R. P. Forder) presided. On his right sat the guest of the evening (Lord Northbrook), Sir George Grey, Sir H. Mildmay, Mr. Grant Duff, Mr. G. S. Lefevre, General

Mr. Dougall, Colonel Hawley, Captain Baring, the Hon. F. Baring, Mr. W. Beach, Archdeacon Utterson, Major Williamson, Mr. J. Bonham Carter, and the Warden. On the left of the Mayor sat Viscount Templeton, Sir W. Grey, Sir J. Kaye, Sir W. Humphrey, Archdeacon Jacob, Sir Bartle Frere, Sir Erskine Perry, Major-General Baker, the Recorder of Winchester, the Hon. J. Dutton, Major Pemberton and Dr. Ridding.

Covers were laid for 150. Several of her Majesty's Ministers who had been invited were unable to be present, having to attend the Cabinet Council.

In his speech after dinner Lord Northbrook said the death of Lord Mayo has been a calamity to this country, and has been received with all the sympathy which so great a calamity commands, in a way which strikingly shows how much he had endeared himself to those with whom he acted in India, whether they were Europeans or natives; and when we receive, as we have not yet had time to receive, full information of the effect which the calamity has produced in India, I feel confident we shall hear that the event has elicited through all parts of India the same expressions of sympathy for Lord Mayo's family, and respect and affection for himself, which it has excited in the United Kingdom. (Cheers.) Mr. Mayor, the duty which I have been called upon to undertake is one of great difficulty and great responsibility.

A subject of her Majesty who goes to share in the administration of India has one great advantage in this—he has no new policy to propound. The great principles of Indian administration have been placed on record in a document which will form one of the leading landmarks in the history of India. I refer to the Proclamation which was issued by her Majesty at the time when the wisdom of Parliament substituted the direct government of the Crown for that of the magnificent company which had governed for many generations, with, as I believe, wisdom and success, our Eastern Empire. (Hear, hear.) I may be allowed, perhaps, to make one other remark relating to India. I have had the advantage for some years of serving in the Indian Department under Lord Halifax, then Sir Charles Wood, who filled successively the offices of President of the Board of Control and Secretary of State for India. No one could serve under Lord Halifax without deriving great advantage from the high character and great ability he brought to the discharge of his official duties. (Cheers.) I am quite aware that the knowledge I may have acquired during those years will not be of so much use at the present time, because of the changes which have passed over the face of the country, and it is never wise to rely on a knowledge of the state of affairs at one time when called on to deal with them after a few years, so rapid now-a-days is the course of events. (Hear.) At the same time, during those years I learnt, I hope, one great lesson which I shall carry with me to India—that is, the difference between the East and the West—the difference between Eastern and Western civilisation, and the danger of being carried away by the ideas of what may be right and politic and wise in this country when we come to deal with a different country—a people with different sentiments, different religions, different education, and a different tone of thought from ourselves—(hear, hear). That lesson, at any rate, I hope to carry with me to India—(hear, hear). Difficult indeed would be the task of any one who leaves the shores of England to occupy a post of great responsibility in the far East if he had not the assistance of able administrators having a full knowledge of the feelings and interests of the people with whom they are brought into contact. But the servants of the Crown who go to India have this peculiar advantage—they have to assist them that magnificent service, the Civil and Military Service of India (hear, hear)—a service which has been justly pronounced second to none in the world (hear, hear), men who, when placed in a position of difficulty and danger, have always proved themselves equal to any occasion (cheers), and who have been actuated during the whole of their career with one desire only—the welfare of the people of India over whom they have to exercise authority. (Cheers.)

PROFESSOR GOLDSTÜCKER.

A great scholar has suddenly passed away. Dr. Theodor Goldstücker, Professor of Sanskrit in University College, London, and President of the Philological Society, died early on Wednesday morning, from an attack of bronchitis, which had been neglected in its first stages. Born at Königsberg, in Prussia, he began the study of Sanskrit, for the profound knowledge of which he has since become so famous throughout the world, under Professor Peter von Böhlen, at the University of that city. He continued this study under Professors August Wilhelm von Schlegel and Christian Lassen, at Bonn, where he was a contemporary of the late Prince Consort. He afterwards resided for some time at Paris, where he enjoyed the friendship of men of the greatest distinction, such as Burnouf, Letronne, &c. He then established himself as a Privat-Dozent at the University of Berlin, where he began soon to display great scholarly activity. Alexander von Humboldt formed even at that time a high estimate of the capacities of the young scholar, whose aid, in several difficult questions of Indian philosophy, he gratefully acknowledges in his "Kosmos." Goldstücker assembled around himself a circle of young men, whom he succeeded in inspiring with his love for the language and the land of the Vedas, and many of whom have since arrived at great eminence as Sanskrit scholars. It was owing to his great love of, and devotion to, his favourite science that, in 1850, he came to England, where he has resided ever since, having soon after his arrival received the appointment of Professor of Sanskrit at University College.

The late Professor carried conscientiousness and modesty to such an extreme degree that the learned world will hardly ever know what it has lost through his death. His published works are few, and the greatest undertaken by him, the Sanskrit Dictionary, which assumed under his hands the form of a gigantic treasury, in which the words of the unprinted as well as of the printed Sanskrit literature were to be recorded, will also remain a torso. The earliest work undertaken by Goldstücker was the translation into German of the "Prabodha Chandrodaya," a theologico-philosophical drama, by Krishna-Miśra, to which Professor Rosenkranz wrote a preface. In 1861 he published, as an introduction to a fac-simile edition of the "Manava-Kalpa-Sutra," an investigation under the title "Panini, his Place in Sanskrit Literature," of some literary and chronological questions, which may be settled by a study of Panini's work. Goldstücker also edited the text of the "Jaiminiya-Nyāya-Māla-Vistara," of which work 400 pages, in large quarto, are in type. In 1866 Professor Goldstücker started the Sanskrit Text Society, under the patronage of the Prince of Wales, and under the Presidency of the Duc d'Aumale. The late Professor was an active member of the Philological Society, before which he read, during the time of his membership, a number of important papers on Comparative Philology and Mythology. Unfortunately, he could never be prevailed upon to let them appear in the Transactions of the Society. Goldstücker was an occasional writer in some English periodicals. Among his contributions to the Athenæum were the remarkable articles on the East India Museum, which appeared in our columns four years ago. To the Westminster Review he contributed several important papers, among them the well-known one on the Mahabharata, which has since been published in a separate form. All the articles on Indian Philology and Mythology in Chambers's "Encyclopædia" are from the pen of the Professor. He was so entirely recognised as the first authority on matters connected with Ancient Hindū Literature, both sacred and profane, that for years past he has been consulted upon many disputed questions of the Hindū law of inheritance. A lecture delivered by him "On the Deficiencies in the Present Administration of Hindū Law," is the latest production of his pen which has been given to the public. It is no secret that the Professor meant to expand this paper into a regular treatise; and the non-completion of this important and much-needed work is greatly to be regretted. His very last labour in the public service, and one which he has left nearly completed, is a photo-lithographic facsimile edition of Patanjali's Commentary to Panini's Grammatical Sutras, called "Mahabhashya," for which the funds had been voted with great liberality by the Indian Government. His devotion to this work, which had engrossed his attention almost night and day for several months past, may have been the cause of that neglect of his personal health which has led to so sudden and fatal a close of his career.—Athenæum.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The select committee to inquire into the financial administration of the Government of India resumed its sittings from last session on Friday, March 1; Major-General Sir T. Pears and Mr. T. L. Secombe, military and financial secretaries to the India Office, being examined together on items under the head of marine charges, pensions, superannuations, retiring, compassionate and furlough allowances, &c. The early portion of the inquiry was in reference to the nature and character of the pensions paid at home. The next subject dealt with was two monitors for the defence of Bombay Harbour, which would cost, exclusive of armaments, the one £110,000, the other £140,000, delivered at the Western Presidency. The next item, "contribution towards the expenses of H.M.S. ships employed in the Indian seas," led to a cross-examination. It appears that the Admiralty engages to keep six armed ships in the Indian waters, with crews aggregating 1,000 men, for whose services India pays at the rate of £70 a head, or £70,000 a year—deduction being made, should at any time only five ships be on service. Three of these ships, or gunboats, are permanently stationed in the Persian Gulf, and are placed at the absolute disposal of the resident at Bushire, in virtue of power delegated to that official by the Indian Government. These particular vessels are repaired and supplied with stores at the cost of India.

The next matter investigated was pensions and superannuations. It appeared that a very large amount (£216,000) was expended on all kinds of pensions at home, and also in India. Evidence, however, was taken only as to the home-paid pensions. A considerable proportion of the marine and other pensions paid by the India Office were now falling in; and some had already expired. The expiring pensions were such as those granted at the abolition of the old Board of Control and Haileybury and Addiscombe Colleges, and other reductions and modifications in the East India Company's late establishment, made on the transference of the Company's powers to the Crown. There were other kinds of pensions, such as those for distinguished services, superannuation, charges of un-covenanted servants residing in England, and the various civil and military funds taken over by the Crown in 1866.

In connection with the late Indian navy pensions, Sir J. Elphinstone raised the question of the comparative inutility of the present naval service. He asked, had not some correspondence passed between the Bombay and the Imperial Government on the subject of the unsuitable character of the present ships of war employed on the Persian Gulf, and as to the ignorance of the officers both of the Persian language and the wants and wishes of the people living on the islands of the gulf?

Sir T. Pears said such a correspondence had taken place; he would be able to produce the papers.

Sir J. Elphinstone said he believed that disturbances had broken out so suddenly in the Persian Gulf as to find the British naval force watching the coast unprepared to contend with the piratical incursions at the prompt moment.

The inquiry next turned upon the Civil Service furlough allowances. It was shown that the new furlough codes of 1868 had effected some essential and equitable reforms on furlough pay.

The succeeding item investigated was that of £475,320 paid to the War-office for the supply of recruits to India, and for the pay of colonels of cavalry and infantry regiments serving in that country. Evidence was given showing that the large outlay on English soldiers and recruits sent out to India was owing to the Home Indian Government having to obtain the new troops through the War-office, instead of being allowed to recruit, like the latter, in the open market. Both witnesses declared that the present scale of charges, under this head, as laid down by the War-office, was exorbitant. Every new cavalry recruit costs £136, 13s. 11d. Each infantry recruit, under the same conditions, costs £63. 8s.

On Tuesday the joint examination of General Sir T. Pears and Mr. Seccombe was resumed, and Mr. Richardson, of the Indian troopship transport service, was included in the examination on the Transport Service, there being thus three witnesses before the committee together. The subjects inquired into were the charges for the troop transport service, pay of non-effective officers, honorary colonels' allowances, soldiers' pensions, charges for the Indian Post-office, India stocks and securities, India-office despatches and political missions and agencies, &c. In investigating the troop transport service it came out that, although great facilities had attended it, especially since the opening of the Suez Canal, yet the five steam transport ships built for the carrying of troops were not adequately served, and remained deficient in the most recent steam machinery adopted by the steam maritime service generally. The Indian transports were not utilised to the extent that they might be, being each only employed during a small portion of the year.

After inquiring into some further charges for pensions, which elicited facts proving that the Indian revenue was heavily taxed to support a surplusage of officers, the examination continued on the subject of the army.

Full explanations were given as to the constituents of the officering of the British Forces in India, and it was shown that the present economical object was to reduce as much as possible the number of officers. As many as 200 officers were retained at home, and paid for training recruits, but the witnesses thought a less number would be sufficient. A discussion arose respecting the position and cost of the so-called honorary colonels connected with the British-Indian Forces, but who were ineffective officers, and rated on the non-effective list. It was shown that £55,000 were paid by India in 1870-71 to honorary-colonels nominally in command of regiments sent out to that country, but who are actually general officers, and whose connection with their respective regiments is merely nominal. But they had reduced the number of officers in the British Army in India from a total of 4,000 to a total of 3,600 since the amalgamation.

On Friday the Hon. Gerald C. Talbot, Director General of the Store Department at the India-office, and H. G. Bedford, Esq., the Chief Clerk, were examined on the modes of supplying army and other stores to India, and receiving back unused or useless and obsolete stores in this country. The entire charge for army stores was £965,000, which was inquired into item by item. On investigating an exceptional charge of £70,000 for stores ordered by the Calcutta Port Fund, it appeared that a valuable portion of these stores was wharf materials, improved screw moorings, and mooring chains, anchors, buoys, &c., for Port Canning sent out in 1869. The moorings were very costly machinery, and from the massive and peculiar character of it, had to be sent out as special freight from Sunderland at 44s. and 59s. 6d. per ton, being double the usual rate. But two special ships had to be obtained for the transport. Through the failure of Port Canning as a marine establishment, these moorings were thrown away upon that port, and the cost was therefore a loss to the Indian Government. The charge beyond the contract sums paid for stores was 5 per cent., which the Store Department itself took for agency. The witness admitted that the Indian Government sometimes paid greatly more for stores than they might do by going into the open market, or bargaining for them with private firms. Large quantities of old stores came back from India, and were sold by auction in this country as waste material. Beer sent out sometimes came back condemned as bad. The contracts for beer were very large. It was calculated that the army consumed one hogshead of beer per man annually.

Mr. T. L. Seccombe was recalled, and the Committee with him went through a number of small miscellaneous charges, first inquiring into the nature of India stocks and securities. It was mentioned in reference to a charge for the education of natives for admission to the Civil Service, that the scholarships have been abolished by an Act of Parliament. Only eight native youths had passed the examination in this country and been admitted to the Indian Civil Service. The examinations had been discontinued; but the scholars who competed had proved highly intelligent students. If therefore the scholarships had been continued they would have produced good men.

Miscellaneous.

LORD NORTHBROOK'S MILITARY SECRETARY.—We (Times) understand that Lieut. Colonel W. Earle proceeds to India with Lord Northbrook as Military Secretary.

THE NEW GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY.—(INDIA OFFICE, March 2.)—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Sir Philip Edmond Wodehouse, K.C.B., to be Governor of Bombay.

MAJOR-GENERAL PROBYN.—The Prince of Wales has appointed Major General D. M. Probyn, C.B., V.C., of her Majesty's Indian Army, to be an Equerry to his Royal Highness, vice Lieut.-Colonel F. C. Keppel, Grenadier Guards, resigned.

THE GRAVE OF THE LATE EARL OF MAYO.—Arrangements are being made at the churchyard of Johnstown (close to the entrance-gate of Palmerstown Demesne, Naas) for the reception of the remains of the late Earl of Mayo. The funeral, it is said, will take place on the 15th of April, and according to the will made by his lordship he was to be interred, without pomp, in the churchyard of Johnstown, without a vault, and a county Wicklow granite cross to mark his grave.

FAILURE OF AN EAST INDIAN MERCHANT.—In the Court of Bankruptcy, on March 6, before Mr. Registrar Roche, there was an adjourned meeting for examination in the case of W. Harbord. The case has been a considerable time before the Court. The bankrupt was a partner in the firm of Harbord, Wilkinson, and Anderson, as merchants, who had separate establishments at London, Liverpool, and Bombay. The accounts showed the total indebtedness to be £150,030, and the assets £41,641, showing a deficiency of £108,389. The case was adjourned on the last occasion to obtain some information as to the Bombay accounts, but Mr. Wilkinson, the Bombay partner, had refused to furnish any. His Honour, in giving judgment, said that the bankrupt had rendered the trustee every assistance in his power; under the circumstances, he was of opinion that the bankrupt should be permitted to pass.

A DIVORCE CASE.—In the Divorce Court, on Wednesday, the case of Daniell v. Daniell and Ogilby was disposed of. The petitioner is a surgeon in the Indian service. He married the respondent in 1863. In 1867 they came to Europe, and visited various places on the Continent—among others Geneva, where they made the acquaintance of the co-respondent, who is a member of a firm of ship-brokers in the City. The petitioner returned to India in September, 1868, leaving the respondent in England, and in November, 1869, she gave birth to a child at Brussels. On hearing this the petitioner instituted the present suit, which was practically undefended. The petition contained originally a claim for damages, but it was withdrawn. Evidence in support of the adultery charged against the respondent and co-respondent was given, and the jury found for the petitioner. The Court granted a decree nisi, with costs against the co-respondent.

IN RE THE ROYAL NAVAL, MILITARY, AND EAST INDIA COMPANY ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—This was a petition to wind up the above-named society, and was presented by a widow lady whose husband had during his life paid certain premiums to secure an annuity of £50 a year to her in case she survived him. The husband died in 1864, and in 1866 the society transferred its business to the European Assurance Society. The annuity had been regularly paid, first by the Naval and Military Society, and afterwards by the European, down to January last, when the latter company being in process of liquidation, the petitioner could not obtain payment. She now sought to have the Naval and Military Company wound up on the ground that she was no party to the amalgamation, that the European paid her annuity as the agents of the Naval and Military, and that the latter company still existed for the purpose of a winding-up. His Honour said the Naval and Military was governed by the Family Endowment Society, and that the petitioner had done nothing to bar her right to go against the original society. With regard to the application of the liquidators of the European Society to defer the winding-up order, his Honour was satisfied that the petitioner would get but a small dividend from the European. She was an immediate creditor, and he could not postpone her for an indefinite time, or defer the winding-up order to which he considered she was entitled. His Honour accordingly made an order for a compulsory winding-up of the Naval and Military Society, giving the petitioner and the former directors their costs, directing the liquidators of the European to take their costs out of the assets of that company, and disallowing the costs of those creditors who supported the petition by counsel instructed by the same solicitors as those for the petitioner, on the ground that, having so good a case upon the petition, those creditors should either have been co-petitioners or should not have appeared at all.

INDIAN APPEALS.—The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council were engaged on March 2 in two Indian cases from Bengal, and judgment was given in both. In one—Mussumat Buhune Kowur v. Lalla Bubome Lall—heard on a former occasion, Sir Montague Smith gave judgment, and allowed the appeal with costs. In the other case—Mussumat Juswunt Koonwur v. Mussumat Parabutty Koonwur and others—which was an ex parte application, and in which Mr. Leith appeared, the appeal was dismissed. Sir Montague Smith also gave the judgment of the Committee in this case. A new list of the sittings has just been issued, containing fifty-four appeals and five for judgment. Their lordships commenced on the 11th ult., and will continue until shortly before Easter. Considerable progress has already been made in diminishing the arrears. General Forester, M.P., and others v. the Secretary of State for India.—This appeal, which was commenced, on the renewed argument on one point only, on Feb. 28, was resumed on March 6. The case had occupied several days on a former occasion, and their lordships took time to consider their judgment, but before they proceeded further one counsel on each side was requested to reargue one single point in respect to the title of the Begum Sombre, through whom the appellants claimed considerable property. The Begum had by deed of gift and will devised the property to Mr. Dyce Sombre and his widow, making her claim as his administratrix, and General Forester, who had married the lady, were parties before the Committee. The property had been taken possession of by the Government of India on the death of the Begum, and the questions were—whether the act of the Government of India in taking possession was not an act of State against a State, or an international act, over which a municipal court would have no jurisdiction; and whether, if the Court had jurisdiction, the Begum had such an estate or interest as enabled her to make a devise to Mr. Dyce Sombre; or whether, on the contrary, her interest did not determine and cease on her death, so as to enable the Government to take possession. Sir Roundell Palmer addressed their lordships as to the genuineness of certain documents in support of the title. Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., discussed in an elaborate manner several points—that the claim now set up was inconsistent with the claim set up by the Begum in her lifetime, and persisted in till her death; that at most she had only a life estate, as she had shown by her own conduct; that the copies of certain documents were inadmissible, and that the originals of which they purported to be copies were, both from internal and external evidences, forgeries. The case was resumed on Saturday, when the arguments on either side were concluded, but judgment was deferred.

MEETING OF OFFICERS INTERESTED IN THE KIRWEE PRIZE CLAIMS.—On Feb. 28 the meeting of the officers interested in the Kirwee Booty, convened by circular and advertisements, was held at the Charing-cross Hotel, the Rev. J. Vivian Ball, the representative of the late General Sir George Cornish Whitelock, in the chair. Several general officers gave their votes at the meeting. Mr. Ball, having opened the meeting, called upon General Miller, the President of the Special Prize Committee, to read the report, which was read accordingly. The following resolutions were carried either nem. con. or by a very large majority of votes, including those of five general officers interested in the distribution of the prize:—“1. Resolution in approval of the report of the Special Prize Committee appended to the minutes of the general meeting held February 28, 1872. 2. The meeting receives with great satisfaction the report of the Special Prize Committee, and desires at the same time to express, in the warmest and most sincere terms, its grateful sense of the services rendered by all the members of that committee. Their unremitting efforts for the common cause, and the anxious care with which they have for so long a period watched over the interests of Sir George Whitelock's force, and of the late Lord Clyde and his staff, merit the most cordial recognition at the hands of all concerned. 3. That the Special Prize Committee, having recently recovered for the prize fund several thousand pounds of interest in addition to the £74,382 recovered in 1867, and irrespective of further expectations, fully enjoys the confidence and approval of the meeting, which considers its future assistance necessary to the education and establishment of the just claims of the troops. The committee is therefore earnestly entreated to continue its labours and services, with power to add to its numbers as heretofore. 4. That this meeting protests, with all respect, against the action of the India Department in withdrawing—subsequently to the proceedings at the Treasury in 1869—its recognition of the Special Prize Committee, as needless inconvenience, delay, and expense have thus been created; and the meeting is of opinion that the prize agents should endeavour to obtain from the India-office the same recognition of the committee which has already been given to that body by the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury. 5. That this meeting, gratefully acknowledges the valuable assistance which the prize agents have from time to time afforded to the Special Prize Committee, and trusts that they will henceforth continue strenuously to co-operate with the committee in their exertions for the common benefit of all interested in General Whitelock's booty. 6. That in the opinion of this meeting it is very desirable that the prize agents should resume their position as members of the special prize committee. 7.

That this meeting, having considered the financial statement of the committee, desires to express its great regret that the seventh resolution of the meeting held on June 22, 1870, which proposed to place a sum of not less than £2,000 at their disposal, has not been acceded to by the India Department. 8. That this meeting has observed that individual members of the committee have incurred a heavy personal liability in order to defray the absolutely necessary expenditure for the common cause; that their exertions appear to have resulted in a new acquisition of several thousand pounds to the prize fund. The meeting earnestly recommends that an application for £3,000, as a charge upon the balance in hand, should be now made to the proper authorities, and this meeting is of opinion that the prize agents should promote this application to the utmost of their power. 9. That this meeting feels itself imperatively called upon to record in an especial manner its high sense of the consummate ability and unwearied energy displayed by Mr. Kinloch, who has acted as its secretary throughout the arduous contest which the special prize committee have been maintaining on behalf of all interested in the Banda and Kirwee booty, and this meeting tenders to Mr. Kinloch its grateful thanks for his unremitting exertions and invaluable services in its cause. A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the proceedings.—Home News.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, March 4.—THE MONEY-ORDER SYSTEM.—Sir J. PAKINGTON, in the absence of Lord H. LENOX, asked the Postmaster General whether he would extend to India the money-order system, the benefits of which had already been conceded to Belgium, Denmark, Switzerland, Germany, Egypt, the Argentine Republic, and the United States of America.—Mr. MONSELL replied that Government were most anxious to place India in the same position with regard to these orders as most of the colonies. A proposal with that object had been made to the India Government rather more than a year ago, and he was informed that that Government was likely soon to accept it, but as yet no official reply had been received.

THE PERSIAN MISSION.—Mr. RYLANDS asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether any communication had been received from the Government of India approving of the transfer of the Persian Mission to the India Department, in accordance with the recommendation of the select committee on diplomatic and consular services; and, if so, whether he would lay the correspondence relating thereto upon the table of the House.—Mr. GRANT DUFF replied that it was not in his power to produce any correspondence on the subject.

ARMY-ESTIMATES.—In Committee of Supply on the first vote of the Army Estimates for 133,649 men; Mr. HOLMS moved the reduction of the vote by 20,000 men, explaining that he did it by way of protest against Mr. Cardwell's scheme of reorganisation, in which he saw the continuation of an antiquated and complicated military system, and no security for efficiency and economy. He contended that our army was the most costly of any country in Europe, and that, instead of having a trustworthy force commanded by competent officers, the money was squandered on hosts of pensioners and useless officials, while the number of officers was greatly in excess of the wants of the service. The proposed plan of localisation was unsatisfactory; and so was the scheme for a reserve force, and the contemplated system of recruiting. The militia force stood condemned by the testimony of the world, while the cost of the whole was enormous. He recommended that the pay of the infantry, artillery, cavalry, and engineers should be raised to 1s. 6d. per day, which, with the usual allowances, would bring the wages of the men up to 12s. 6d. per week. Under such an arrangement, combined with short service, a superior class of recruits would be attracted to the service, and an efficient reserve would be created.—The motion was seconded by Mr. MUNTZ, who expressed his satisfaction at the proposal for building and acquiring militia and other barracks, and raising the money by terminable annuities.—Lord E. CECIL asked for explanations of various points in Mr. Cardwell's opening speech, and Colonel ANSON called attention to what he maintained was the lamentable state of recruiting, especially for the artillery. Referring to Mr. Cardwell's scheme, he pointed out certain defects in the localisation proposals, and suggested that the regiments to be linked together should be converted at once into one regiment of two battalions. Among other things, he complained of the obstinacy of the War-office in shirking the question of retirement, and admitted the fairness with which the Commissioners were carrying out the Purchase Act.—Mr. CAMPBELL replied to the objections made by Mr. Holms, and dwelt upon the advantages of the new recruiting system and the localisation of corps. What the country required was a small but efficient army in the time of peace, capable of easy expansion in time of war, and this was precisely what the Government aimed at attaining. As to the term of service, we were at present engaged in ascertaining by experiment the exact point which would produce a reserve of the quantity and quality we wanted; and it would be unwise to make a premature reduction in the numbers of our army until we had seen how the reserve-producing machinery would work.—The discussion was continued by Mr. STANLEY, Major WALKER, Colonel GILPIN, Sir WILFRID LAWSON,

Mr. RYLANDS, Colonel BARTTELOT, Sir HENRY HOARE, Sir PERCY HERBERT, Mr. ANDERSON, and Mr. D. DALRYMPLE.—Ultimately, on the motion of Lord ELCHO, the debate was adjourned until Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, March 8.—THE PRINCE OF ABYSSINIA.—Mr. LOWE, in reply to Sir STAFFORD NORTHCOTE, said it was perfectly correct that Prince Alamayon of Abyssinia had been withdrawn from the care of Captain Speedy. The change, however, had not been made out of any disparagement of Captain Speedy's services, but because the gallant captain had been transferred from Oude to another district in India, and it was deemed desirable to have the youth educated in England. This decision had been arrived at, not only for the sake of the Prince himself, in whom her Majesty took a great interest, but in view of the important part he may have to take in future years in the civilisation of his countrymen. The Prince had been placed under the care of the head master of Cheltenham School as a private pupil.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

THE CLAIMS OF INDIAN OFFICERS.

The Echo observes that the Indian officers who were transferred to her Majesty's service by the 21 and 22 Vict., cap. 106, have a grievance, and, because they have not many and influential friends in the House of Commons, their grievance will be all they will have, unless the general public bestirs itself to see them treated as fairly as their English brethren. Under the old Company's management, and by approval of her Majesty's Government, it was the custom of members of the Indian Civil Service, Medical Service, and Regimental systems, to quicken retirement by payment of bonuses to the retiring officers. In the Medical and Civil Services these payments were made from a common fund. In the Army they were made from separate subscriptions in each regiment and branch of the service—the detailed working of the scheme being different, but the principle the same. On the passing of the Act above quoted, specific provision was made for the Civil and Medical bonus funds, but the Regimental scheme not being a common fund was overlooked. The Act, however, professed to secure all officers the position and expectations they had before the transfer, and Lord Derby, in speaking on the Bill, explicitly stated that such was its intention. The introduction of the Staff Corps, with an entirely different system of promotion, caused the entire collapse of the bonus system in regiments, and subscriptions already paid by officers were lost to the subscribers as completely as if they had been a body of ordinary deferred annuity insurers in a collapsed Insurance Company. Their plea is very simple. It is that they shall be treated as fairly and generously as the English officers who are compensated for the abolition of purchase. And we must say we think they have better reason. Their request is just, and they have not obstructed the business of a Session in pushing their claims into notice.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, Or, PEARL DENTIFRICE,

Compounded of the choicest and most recherche ingredients of the Oriental Herbal, is of inestimable value in Preserving and Beautifying the Teeth, Strengthening the Gums, and in giving a pleasing Fragrance to the Breath. It eradicates Tartar from the Teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, and polishes and preserves the Enamel—to which it imparts a Pearl-like Whiteness. The general demand for it at once announces the favour in which it is universally held.

Price 2s. 6d. per box. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, and at all Bazaars.

From Mr. FARLE, M.P.S., 22, Market-place, Hull:—"Your Wafers are invaluable for the Voice, Throat, and Chest. All sufferers from Bronchitis, Hacking Cough, and deprivation of rest should take them—hundreds would find quick relief."

Sold at 1s. 1½d. per box.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

For the cure of burns, scalds, wounds, and ulcers, this justly-celebrated Ointment stands unrivalled. Its balsamic virtues immediately on application lull the pain and smarting, protect the exposed nerves from the air, and give to the vessels the vigour necessary to heal the sore, and confer on the blood a purity which permits it only to lay down healthy flesh in the place of that destroyed. Holloway's Pills, simultaneously taken, much assist the Ointment's purifying and soothing power. Together these medicaments act like a charm. Travellers embarking for unwholesome climates, where pestilential airs are constantly producing fever, should provide themselves with these remedies, which will assuredly save them nights of watching and days of pain.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S (Ex. Army Med. Staff)
CHLORODYNE

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. WOOD stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the Inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's.—See Times, July 12, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Remedial Uses and Action.

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

Extracts from Medical Opinions.

The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—“Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed.”

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—“Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not supply a want and fill a place.”

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—“So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases.”

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1869, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the Inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.

CAUTION.—None genuine without the words “Dr. J. Collis Browne” on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

Summary and Review.

Now that the Indian mails appear to arrive regularly on Monday mornings, the publication of Allen's Mail will in future take place, as in fact it has generally done for some time past, on Monday afternoon instead of Tuesday.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Feb. 26; Agra and Madras, Feb. 24; Calcutta, Feb. 23.

THE one topic of the week in India was the death of the late Viceroy, and the leading events of the same time are nearly all connected therewith. The papers, Native and English, vie with each other in long accounts of the fatal visit to Port Blair, in regretful comments on Lord Mayo's Indian career, in discussions as to the murderer's probable motives, and in graphic descriptions of the ceremonies following on the arrival of Lord Mayo's remains at Calcutta. The great procession of Saturday the 17th which conducted the body to Government House passed everywhere through deep lines of spectators silent and for the most part clothed in black. On the 21st a similar procession accompanied the body to the Daphne, whence on the following day it was transferred at Saugor to the Glasgow. The sympathy everywhere shown for Lady Mayo, and the horror expressed by natives of all classes at her husband's murder, are as remarkable as they are probably sincere. Even the convicts at Port Blair are described as joining in the universal outcry against the assassin. Meetings, deputations, addresses of condolence, chime in with the grief expressed in the set official tributes to the memory of the late Viceroy. In reply to one deputation, headed by Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, the Governor of Bombay spoke in touching terms of the friend he had lost, and besought his hearers to forbear from rash suspicions regarding the murderer's motives. He bore witness to the horror which so many of his Mussulman fellow-citizens had been foremost in expressing at so cruel a deed. "Our sorrow and regret"—said one gentleman to him—"equals yours; but we have to suffer more, because we feel ashamed and humiliated that such a crime should have been committed by one of our reed."

IN taking formal leave of his own Council, Lord Napier, Governor of Madras, now acting Viceroy of India, bore witness to the warm and friendly interest which the late Viceroy had always taken in the affairs of the Madras Presidency. By his death Madras had lost "a protector and a friend, to whom no interest, however remote, was indifferent, and who was ever anxious to relinquish to others that share of power which he felt he could not retain with advantage to himself. To such wise and considerate principles of action in public affairs, the late Viceroy united in his private relations a dignity, sweetness, and generosity of character which inspired respect and attachment in all who approached him. With this able and amiable statesman it was my good fortune to work in the most perfect harmony during the whole period of our official association. Such a connection could never have been severed without regret. It may be imagined how much that regret has been intensified by the catastrophe in which so much goodness and usefulness have closed."

ON the same occasion Lord Napier received some flattering tributes to his own career as Governor from successive members of his Council. Speaking for all his colleagues, Mr. Arbuthnot avowed his belief that Lord Napier's government of Madras would favourably compare with the best of those which had preceded it, and that his policy had always been wise, beneficent, and progressive. Mr. V. Ramiengar, besides re-echoing Mr. A. Brown's praises of his Lordship's courtesy and kindly consideration, thanked him warmly for the encouragement he had "given to natives to express freely and unreservedly their honest opinion on public measures." Referring to some measures lately passed through Council, Mr. Gajapathi Rao declared that "never were adopted measures more fraught with lasting future good" to the Madras Presidency.

LORD NAPIER's departure from Madras on the 23rd February was greeted by one of the very largest gatherings ever witnessed in that city. Crowds of people lined the road from the Fort to the Pier, or filled the houses near the latter. The Princes of Arcot and Travancore, with a large number of leading Hindus, were among the foremost in paying homage to Lord and Lady Napier. The native address presented to him at the Pier recounted the many services he had rendered the country from his first efforts to avert the famine of 1866 to his latest measures in aid of popular education. A grateful reference to the memorials he would leave behind at Madras and elsewhere of his own private almsdeeds, was accompanied by a request for his lordship's portrait "as a small token of our modest appreciation of your useful labours for our good."

LORD MAYO's murderer, Shere Ali, had been sentenced to hanging before the mail left Calcutta. That sentence, we learn by a telegram of yesterday's date, has at length been carried out. The statement he had promised to make before his execution came, it appears, to this; that he had resolved to murder both the Viceroy and General Stewart, that on hearing the guns which announced Lord Mayo's arrival, he went and sharpened his knife in the jungle, and that he could not resist the temptation to kill the Viceroy when he saw him pass. It appears that no clue to anything like a conspiracy has yet been discovered; nor is it stated how he made his murderous attack; but the belief is that he quietly joined the party and crept up to the Viceroy in the dark.

ACCORDING to the Indian papers, General Bouchier was last heard of on the 18th of February, when the troops destroyed Lalboora's chief village of Chumfai without opposition. It was raining heavily, and the troops were huddled. General Brownlow on the 18th reports that the two most powerful Howlong Chiefs had made their submission, agreed to give up their prisoners, and to allow free access to their country. Some of the prisoners had already arrived.

LORD ULICK BROWNE has been appointed chairman of the Justices of Calcutta, and Mr. S. Wauchope Commissioner of Police.

THE Indian papers publish an important despatch of Dec. 6, 1861, from the Secretary of State for India on the Uncovenanted Civil Service. We have only room now for the following ominous paragraph:—

It is, no doubt, difficult to devise rules to meet all the cases of European and Eurasian uncovenanted servants who have obtained their first appointments in India. Saving such reasonable concessions as I am willing to grant to actual incumbents, I desire that it may be regarded as a general principle, not hereafter to be departed from, that all Europeans appointed in India to offices which could be fitly held by natives, should receive no greater advantages of any kind, furlough, of course, included, than would be enjoyed by natives holding such posts or offices.

A CALCUTTA telegram of March 12 reports the arrival there of Pan Singh, the Kuma leader, on the night before from Allahabad, where he had been kept under lock and key ever since the outbreak in Sirhind. From Calcutta he is to be carried off to Rangoon.

FROM another telegram of the same date we learn that the remainder of General Bouchier's Column had already started from Tipai Mukh on their march back to Cachar. It appears that several of the soldiers had died of cholera on the road.

ON the 11th of March, according to a recent telegram, the steamer Glasgow left Bombay for Suez with Lady Mayo and her husband's remains on board.

To judge from recent telegrams, the famine in Persia still rages, and no abatement has yet appeared in the consequent distress. At the meeting held in the Mansion-house on last Friday week for the relief of the sufferers, fresh reports dating from January last were read, disclosing a woful state of things in the famine-stricken districts. From the south-east of Persia the distress appears to have extended to the north-west; a thousand families being reduced to the verge of starvation in one town alone, while a winter of unusual severity has everywhere intensified the prevailing misery. Cold, hunger, and disease combined, were playing havoc with the poorer classes. It is some comfort to think that a hard winter bodes well for next season's harvests, for it is the mountain snows that feed as they melt the few streams which irrigate the land of Persia, and for the last three years those streams have failed to do their wonted work. But in the meantime the suffering caused by last year's drought must press heavily on the people, and the funds hitherto collected for their relief need prompt replenishing. If the Committee could but count on continued help for only a few weeks more, numbers of helpless and starving wretches would be enabled to tide over the present calamity. The money hitherto collected has been laid out by the volunteer agents of the London Committee in food, clothes, and the construction wherever possible of relief works. In accordance with the suggestion put forth by Sir Macdonald Stephenson, the meeting on the 8th resolved to appeal through the newspapers for further aid in the good work, on the understanding that all subscriptions should cease on June 30. Such an appeal, we hope, will not be made in vain.

IN his letter to the Times of last Tuesday Mr. Fitzjames Stephen appears to us to have taken needless trouble in exculpating Lord Mayo from a purely imaginary charge. The Law Member of the Indian Government fears that the object of Lord Mayo's unfortunate trip to Burmah and Port Blair may have been misunderstood in this country, and therefore hastens to assure us that it was not undertaken "for the sake of amusement merely." We certainly were not aware that such a notion had occurred to anybody whose opinion about the late Viceroy was worth having. To none of our readers at any rate could such a notion have suggested itself, if they have followed the accounts we have from time to time given of Lord Mayo's movements. No one acquainted with his previous career could have mistaken the voyage to Rangoon and Maulmain for a mere pleasure-trip, and the brief reports of his doings in these places showed how little of his time was reserved for mere pleasure, even when he might fairly have taken as much of that as he chose. We hardly needed Mr. Stephen's assurance that he had serious things to talk over with Mr. Eden, or that his subsequent visit to Port Blair was one of grave business. No sooner had the telegram told us of his death than the Times at once indicated to its many readers the apparent object of that visit. It was everywhere taken for granted that the late Viceroy had gone thither to see for himself how things were managed in a convict settlement, of which strange stories had reached our ears a few months before. Had Lord Mayo lived to visit Orissa, we may be sure that there also business would have been his first care, and that two men so keen for work as he and Mr. Campbell would have got through an unwonted amount of it in the shortest possible time. In truth, the idea of going anywhere for mere amusement was the last thing which most people would have dreamed of laying to Lord Mayo's charge.

It is not on the 25th, but on the 21st March, that the new Viceroy sets out for India, by way of Marseilles, whence he proceeds on board the Antelope to Alexandria. From Suez he will resume his voyage on board the Glasgow, whence Lady Mayo and her sad burden will, we believe, be transmitted to the Antelope. Captain Speedy, erewhile guardian of the Abyssinian Prince Alamayu, has just started on his return voyage to India, relieved of his young charge, who remains in the care of the Head Master of Cheltenham College, but honoured with a graceful token of Royal appreciation in the shape of a handsome gold watch and chain. On the former had been engraved the following legend—"To Captain Speedy from Victoria R."

AT the last meeting of the Geographical Society two very interesting papers were read and discussed. One of them, by Major E. C. Ross, described a "Visit to Kej and Journey from Gwadar to Kurrachee," while Captain B. Lovett's paper treated of a "Survey of the Perso-Khelat Frontier." As Sir H. Rawlinson reminded his hearers, the country explored by Major Ross is that through which runs the telegraph line from Kurrachee to Teheran, and along a valley 250 miles in length which divides two hill-ranges parallel to the Makran Coast will some day run a line of railway connecting India with the top of the Persian Gulf. From Gwadar on the coast Major Ross went across these ranges to Kej, thence eastward to Bela, and afterwards in a southerly direction to Kurrachee. During his journey he gleaned much useful information regarding the people and their ancient history. The former he found to be of true Aryan descent, speaking a language more nearly akin to ancient than to modern Persian. In the subsequent discussion it was pointed out that Alexander's legions had marched down the long narrow valley of Kej on their way home from the Indus to Babylon, at the time when Nearchus, with one division of the army, made his celebrated voyage from the mouth of the Indus to the Persian Gulf. It was along this same valley that the Arabs centuries afterwards invaded Sindh. Speaking of the date-groves scattered, generally in lines, about the country, Sir Bartle Frere brought up the legend in which the inhabitants ascribe their origin to the seeds of the dates consumed by Alexander's soldiers during their daily marches. It appears that all our previous knowledge of this region was comprised in the Reports of Grant and Pottinger, two officers deputed for that purpose in 1810 and 1811 by Sir John Malcolm, then Special Envoy to the Shah of Persia.

SIR DONALD MACLEOD presided last week at a discussion opened by Mr. F. Campbell, in the rooms of the Society of Arts, on "India as a Field for Private Enterprise." The speaker insisted on the special advantages of Assam, as compared with Australia, New Zealand, or Natal, for retired civil and military officers wishing to emigrate on limited means. The question of getting there settled itself, for the Brahmaputra was navigable by large steamers all the year round. As for the climate, it was healthy enough in the more settled districts where the jungle had been cleared away. The sickness prevalent among the earlier settlers had been mainly due to their selection of unhealthy sites. The soil of Assam was naturally fertile, and eminently fitted for the production of tea. Mr. Campbell also believed in its capacity for producing any amount of silk and cotton. Iron and coal of good quality, to say nothing of gold and silver, also abounded in Assam, while large tracts of waste land were still obtainable, in which men of small means might gain a good livelihood from farming or tea culture, procuring coolie labour cheap from the neighbouring provinces. Mr. Campbell's opinions regarding the healthiness of the climate and the means of access to the country were not shared by some of the subsequent speakers; but the adjournment of the debate was accompanied by a hearty vote of thanks for his interesting and suggestive paper.

THE Daily Telegraph hits a manifest blot in the new scheme of Army Reconstruction in pointing to the expense of keeping up our Indian garrisons under a system of double battalions and six years' service. India, indeed, "will justly cry out as soon as her Exchequer is drained to meet the outlay" involved in the new plan. With a local European army, truly remarks our contemporary, "the difficulty would be reduced to a minimum, and sound policy once more govern our Indian military system. Why we should not have a plan that suits us, and India a plan that would suit her, passeth the comprehension of ordinary men." Just so, but when will our statesmen see the truth of this?

WHATEVER degree of success may await Lord Northbrook during his new career, his public utterances during the last few days prove that he has learned at any rate the art of keeping his own counsel. His speech at Winchester committed him to no avowals of which he might afterwards repent. He had the modesty to hint how greatly recent events in India might tend to modify views formed in the days when he studied Indian politics under Sir Charles Wood. His admission of the difference between Eastern and Western civilisation, however satisfactory, conveys no very clear assurance of the way in which he is likely to deal with questions arising from that difference. The compliments he paid to the great Indian services, and the devotion expressed by him to the leading principles of the Royal Proclamation, shed no particular light on the policy he may or may not purpose to pursue. His professions of regard for the welfare of the Indian peoples, however sincere, could give no clue to his real purposes, or measure the extent of his ability to carry them out. The same kind of open reticence marked his Lordship's answer to the deputations that conferred with him last week. There was nothing unselfish, he avowed, in the proposals made to him from Manchester for the development of trade between the two countries. He was glad to hear that India had improved much of late in the production of cotton for the English market; but he had not yet found time to master the newest details on that subject, and the gentlemen of Manchester must of course be aware that India "is a country where all the feelings of the natives must be most carefully considered." Nothing would tempt him to go against the interests or even wholly against the prejudices of his future subjects. Touching the projected route from India to Western China, he could give no opinion just then, but would remember what he had there heard when the matter came officially before him. Telegraphs too were capital things for India, but that was a very complicated question, into which he would take care to look with every desire to deal fairly between rival claims.

THE following announcement settles the question as to the amount of pension bestowed on Lady Mayo:—

Resolved unanimously by the Secretary of State for India in Council that, having regard to the eminent services rendered by the late Earl of Mayo as Viceroy and Governor-general of India, to the munificence with which he maintained in that office the dignity of the Crown, and to his death by a deed of violence to which he was exposed in the discharge of his public duty, a life annuity of £1,000 be conferred on the Countess of Mayo, to be paid out of the revenues of India; and, further, that there be paid out of the same revenues the sum of £20,000 for the benefit of the younger children of her ladyship and of the late Earl of Mayo.

March 15, 1872.

In last week's report of the Indian Finance Committee it was inadvertently stated that the Store Department at the India Office charged 5 per cent. for agency on all stores sent out to India. The truth is that no commission of any sort is charged on these stores, all goods being invoiced to the several Presidencies at prime cost.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

GONDWANA.

ONE of the most valuable contributions to our general knowledge of India past and present is the volume on the Highlands of Central India, which its accomplished author, Captain James Forsyth, did not live to see through the press.* In spite however of his untimely death, the book, as now published, bears about it no marks of incompleteness, and its contents are full of interest to readers of different tastes and classes. Like many other men of mark in the Indian service, Capt. Forsyth combined the early training of an officer with the habits of a keen sportsman, the tastes of an intelligent scholar, and the practical experience of a civil administrator. Employed for some years in the Forest Department of the Central Provinces, he was a Deputy Commissioner in those provinces when his death last year in London at the early age of thirty-three cut short a career of unusual promise, to which the work before us bears clear witness, both for its literary merits and the proofs it contains of careful study and keen observation.

Although a large part of these Central Provinces, under the name of the Sagar and Narbadá Territories, have been ruled by us for more than fifty years, it is only within the last twenty that attempts have been made to explore them thoroughly. In 1858 Sir Erskine Perry commented on the large tract of country which remained unexplored in the Gondwána Highlands and jungles. So little was then known of these wild regions and the wild tribes who inhabited them, that one officer was eleven years in charge of a district containing some 3,000 square miles of forest and nearly 40,000 aborigines, in which he had never once set foot. Not till after the Mutiny, when Manchester began to look to Central India as a promising cotton field, and the notion of a railway along the Narbadá Valley took definite shape, did the desire for further knowledge translate itself into action under the able leadership of Sir R. Temple, the first Chief Commissioner for the newly-formed Central Provinces.

Then—says Captain Forsyth—were seen strange sights in that unknown land; when distant valleys and mountain gorges, that had heard no other sound than the woodman's axe, echoed to the horsehoofs of the tireless Chief and his small knot of often weary followers; when the solitary Goad or Byga, clearing his patch of millet on the remote hillside, was astonished by the apparition, on some commanding hill-top, of that veritable "Government" (Sirkar) in the flesh, which to him and his for several generations had been an abstraction, represented, if by chance he ever visited the district head quarters, by a "Sahib" in his shirt sleeves, sitting in a dingy office smoking a cheroot!

One of the first fruits of these new researches was the formation of a Forest Conservancy under Captain Pearson, and one of those who during the next five years were hard at work exploring some 36,000 square miles of wooded hill, and nearly as large a tract of low-lying forest to the south, was Captain Forsyth himself. To the new knowledge thus obtained regarding the country and its inhabitants, large additions have since been made by civil officers, surveyors, missionaries, and others who have travelled over the same ground; and the pith of all their gatherings has lately been reproduced in a Gazetteer, to which Mr. Grant, late Secretary to the Chief Commissioner, has prefixed an Introduction, giving a concise history of the provinces themselves. Good maps and yearly official reports leave little more to learn of a hilly region containing about 44,000 square miles, three-fourths of which are still what one-half will always be, waste land. In the present volume we get the cream of many Reports served up in a highly readable form by a writer who can draw largely on his own experiences in aid of the information found elsewhere.

The Highlands of Central India may be said to lie about the 22nd parallel of North Latitude, and between the 76th and 82nd of East Longitude, forming the midmost section of a long range which walls off Hindustan Proper from the Dakhan or Southern India. Or perhaps we should rather speak of two parallel ranges, the Vindhya and the Satpura, enclosing between them the long Narbada Valley, through which the Iron Horse now travels daily on the road from Bombay to Allahabad. The plain out of which rise the Satpura Hills, itself lies a thousand feet above the sea. Above this the country swells upwards in single hills or ranges, whose flat tops vary from 1,000 to 2,500 feet above the plain; and out of these again towers here and there a peak about 5,000 feet above the sea. At the eastern end of the range rises the Narbada. In the centre "the bold group of the Mahadéos, crowned by the Pachmarhi peaks,"—the site of the new Sanitarium—throws the drainage almost equally to the north and south, while the deep valley of the Tapti cleaves the western section in two. These highlands are inhabited by about 4½ millions of souls, a million of whom are aboriginal, and the remainder of Aryan descent. The Gonds, a Dravidian race, who give their name to the country—"Gondwana,"—form the great bulk of the former; a few tribes of Kols and Korkus, akin to the Santals of Bengal, making up the million. These latter show few if any traces of intermixture with their Hindu neighbours, whereas the Gond tribes for the most part seem to have more or less of Hindu blood in their veins. Their chiefs, who approach still nearer to the Hindu type, make a point of seeking wives at any cost from the blue blood of Rajpootana. Many of them already wear the sacred thread of the "twice-born," and all pride themselves on their close adherence to Hindu manners and forms of faith. Nowhere are Brahmans held in greater reverence. Brahmans sometimes cook their food, and they are careful to eat nothing forbidden by Brahmanical law. A like tendency to engraft Hindu ideas and practices on those of their savage forefathers distinguishes the Gonds at large from the less docile Korkús. Their religion is usually a curious jumble of Siva-worship and sacrifice to various powers, good or evil, in Nature. "The malignant powers receive regular propitiation. The Tiger-God has a hut built for him in the wilderness that he may not come near their dwellings. The goddess of small-pox and of cholera receives offerings chiefly when her ravages are threatened." The spirits of persons killed by wild animals are laid with special ceremony. Some of the Gonds retain their old taste for Fetish-worship, one of their idols being an iron spear-head, another a pot full of copper money. Others of a more advanced type worship the heroes of Hindu legend, or such of the Hindu gods as would naturally appeal most strongly to the popular fancy. Vishnu for instance is worshipped chiefly under his attribute of the Man-Tiger, while Siva, his terrible wife Káli, and his son Bhairava engross much the largest share of the popular homage.

The Korkús and other Kolarian tribes, on the other hand, retain their old nature-worship with their old peculiar customs; their half-Hindu chiefs alone adopting the Hindu worship of Siva and his companions. The sun and moon are their leading deities. They are less addicted than the Gonds to sorcery and witchcraft. They are generally an inch or two taller than the Gonds, and somewhat darker; but both races are nearly alike with their low foreheads, flat noses, large heavy lips, and muscular well-shaped figures. They have neither the prominent jaw nor the woolly hair of the negro. The women grow old and ugly very soon. Their dress consists of a short petticoat tucked in between the legs, and a mantle of white cotton over the shoulders and head. Their bare legs are tattooed in all manner of fantastic patterns, and both legs and arms are "usually loaded with tiers of heavy rings—in silver among the more wealthy, but, rather than not at all, then in brass, iron, or coloured glass." Few of the men have more than one wife, who is purchased from her father, either with money or personal service. Infidelity in the married state is said to be very rare, and when it does happen the injured husband is wont to revenge himself by cutting off his wife's nose and cleaving her paramour's head with his axe. The men usually divide their time between hard work in the fields and bouts of hard drinking.

The Gondwána jungles abound in bison, tigers, panthers, boars, bears, deer, foxes, jungle fowl, spur fowl, and so forth. Hunting bison is no child's-play, for these huge beasts, once wounded, go off at a pace which looks slow, but is really very fast, up and down endless hills and deep valleys, never stopping if they can help it before nightfall. In following one of them up Captain Forsyth would frequently sleep out in the forest many miles away from home. To tiger-shooting he devotes a whole chapter, although as mere sport he found it much inferior to bison-stalking. It is a work of charity however to reduce the number of "cattle-lifters"—probably old tigers no longer equal to the chase of lighter game—one of whom will destroy sixty or seventy head of cattle in the course of a year. To stalk them on foot seldom answers unless the huntsman kills his prey at once, for in following a wounded tiger through heavy jungle the man's life is in far worse danger than the tiger's. There is quite risk and excitement enough, with far more certainty of bagging your game, in hunting him on an elephant. In the danger popularly supposed to attend a mere walk in tiger-haunted jungle, Captain Forsyth has very small belief. In ten years of frequent roaming on foot "in the most tigerish localities," he only once came across a tiger when he was not out shooting, and only twice when not actually searching for tigers to shoot. A known man-eater of course would be always dangerous. Such an one, as a rule, "can only be killed by the European sportsman with the help of an elephant, the native shikáris rarely attempting to molest them." A man-eating panther is yet more mischievous than a tiger.

On the Flora of these remote highlands, the teak-forests that cover the trap formation of the central range, the sál forests on the eastern side, which is thus connected with Chota Nagpúr and the lower Himálayas, on the Mhova tree, whose luscious flowers furnish food and strong drink to the wild tribes and the low-caste Hindús, the present volume gives much information at once useful and pleasantly told. The early history of the country under Mohammedan and Marátha rule is briefly sketched. Of its subsequent progress under our rule we have a picture the more satisfactory for its evident faithfulness. On these and many other topics of more or less interest however, the inquiring reader would do well to consult the book itself.

JUDICIAL.—The Hon. the Lieut. Governor is pleased to invest, under section 23 of Act. XXV. of 1861, all canal officers who, at the date of the passing of Act. XXX. of 1871 (the Punjab Canal and Drainage Act), had been and were invested with the powers of a subordinate magistrate of the 2nd class, to be exercised under Act VII. of 1845, with the like powers, to be exercised under Act XXX. of 1871, within their respective districts.

THE INDIAN STAFF CORPS AND THE BRITISH ARMY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—As the British army has lately had transferred to it all the officers serving in the three Staff Corps of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, it may prove of interest to state the number of effective officers so transferred.

By the Quarterly Army List, published in India by authority, dated Jan. 1, 1872, the Staff Corps contains—

	General Officers.	Colonels and Lieut. Colonels.	Majors.	Cpts.	Subalterns, inclusive of Probationers.
In Bengal ...	28	314	211	365	259
In Madras ...	9	227	169	284	57
In Bombay ...	10	127	120	174	93

or, exclusive of general officers, 1,168 field officers and 1,232 captains and subalterns.

There remains a further body of Indian army officers, who elected to remain local, and their numbers are :—

	General Officers.	Colonels and Lieut. Colonels.	Majors.	Cpts.	Subalterns.
In Bengal ...	55	68	15	161	26
In Madras ...	41	50	5	70	11
In Bombay ...	21	30	3	59	15

or, exclusive of general officers, 171 field officers and 342 captains and subalterns.

Therefore the aggregate of the Indian army consists of 1,339 field officers and 1,574 captains or subalterns! rather a startling fact; and, if matters are left to drift on under the existing rules of promotion for length of service,* the field officers will be annually increased by about 100 in excess of casualties, and it may be predicted there will be 2,000 field officers in the Indian army eight years hence, and only 600 or 700 captains and subalterns, should the Staff Corps receive annually as many probationers from British regiments as are required to replace casualties.

The local army officers (171 field officers, 342 captains, or subalterns) may be dismissed without further comment, as they are now dying out, or being absorbed, as promoted to generals in due time. As long as they exist they are an adjunct to the Staff Corps for officering the Native army, or sharing in Staff employ; the less competent officers of them being used only for general duties in the military stations in India.

To revert to the Staff Corps officers, consisting of 1,168 field officers, and 1,232 captains, or subalterns, now incorporated into the British army. A few years hence these officers will utterly block the promotion to generals of all the British army colonels ranking subsequent to February, 1866, the date the amalgamated list of British and Staff Corps colonels begins, so that the question of thinning that list by the inducement of retiring bonuses and pensions is a question affecting the interest of British officers, and not simply one for consideration of the Secretary of State for India. The supreme Government of India has repeatedly urged liberal and early measures for pensioning off the superfluous number of Indian field officers, and has always met with refusal to its proposals from the India Office.

The Indian Native armies of the three Presidencies, inclusive of the Punjab Frontier Forces, Hyderabad Contingent, &c., and excluding military police and purely local corps, consists of 174 regiments of cavalry and infantry, thirty-six companies of sappers and Native artillery. Each regiment requires a complement of three field officers, and four captains, or subalterns, and it is well known many officers are with regiments who are too old for the work, and that the evil is hourly increasing, as Government have failed to provide the proper influx of young blood to the Indian Staff Corps, and to hasten the exit of the old officers, by reason of the Staff Corps muddle that prevents old officers retiring on pensions inadequate to support them and their families, and induces them to hang on for the colonels' off reckoning allowance, due to them after thirty-eight years' service. Consequently those officers, who are now in the prime of their life, are grievously discontented by the slowness of their rise to responsible positions, owing to those positions being mainly held by old colonels whose retirement ought to have been facilitated, and not retarded.

There may be a hopeful future, and many bright careers open to the young British officer who elects to cast his lot in the Indian Staff Corps, in the varied civil and military staff appointments, or in regimental service with the Native armies of the Empire; but ere that future can dawn, Government must do their duty in dealing with the present stagnation, and on behalf of the incoming young blood, provide military funds and adequate pensions.

The Native army of India is much misunderstood in England; it cannot become a source of danger to the Empire by being worked up to higher efficiency than it is now permitted to reach; at present it labours under evils from the system by which it is officered, and by the mistrust shown towards it, by both the Home and Indian Governments, who generally refuse to arm it with the effective musket of the age, and are parsimonious towards it in matters of pay, clothing, and quarters.

The real danger consists in having a Native army too large for the work to be done in time of peace. Numerical reduction of it can be arrived at by rendering it more effective, by totally disconnecting the effective fighting Native army from performance of civil duties; it should supplement the British army in India for active service only, and reorganisation of the Native army should be based on the actual requirements of the Empire, for effective corps for frontier and foreign service; and secondly, for a reserve to it in time of peace, capable of expansion in time of war, and lastly, by organising the existing police into a force sufficient for all civil guards and duties.

The whole question of the Indian army, officers and men, requires the consideration of a Select Committee to establish broad principles for its reformation, and remedies for all defects. It will not do to let matters drift on, because they are misunderstood both in and out of the House of Commons, until another rebellion enlightens the British mind too late.

SENEX.

A MILITIA FOR INDIA.—III.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I rejoice to observe that you have at length republished the Secretary of State's letter of March 2, 1871. By publishing important State documents you render invaluable aid in the government of our Eastern Empire, for, without the influence of public opinion, our statesmen are apt to fall into fatal errors.

In para. 28 the Duke wishes to be informed whether the Viceroy desires that any reserve force in India should be maintained. In paras. 24 and 27 he notices the non-existence of any reserve force, excepting the soldiers belonging to the Madras and Bombay armies, some of whom, it is supposed, might be spared for service in Northern India.

My complaint is that we have no reserve forces in India, and that in times of peril we leave our rich provinces unprotected by sending every available soldier to the scene of war.

Let it not be supposed, because we in a time of war choose to ignore our duties to our loyal native subjects, that the latter are not sensible of our criminal disregard for their safety. In their quiet way they debit us with all the dacoities, murders, and torturings that take place, and earnestly look for the strong arm of some brave fellow-countryman, who would perform the duties of protecting life and property, which we neglect. At the commencement of the Mutiny the citizens complained that I was too much occupied in providing for the safety of the European community, and neglected the duty of protecting the natives. To gain their confidence it was necessary to sleep at night on the flat roof of the Kotwalee, in the heart of the city, in their view.

The Indian Government does not provide effectually for the safety of the property of its subjects during a time of war. The value of their movable property, exclusive of lands and houses, cannot be estimated at less than 400 millions sterling. Is it too much to ask for half a million yearly for a Militia to protect property of such immense value, as well as to form an efficient Reserve for supplying losses in the ranks of our regular army during war? Like Pyrrhus, we are in danger of being ruined even by our victories.

Some of your English readers may have heard of Dacoities, but few know what this terrible crime is. It is not perpetrated in the dark; the dacoits light torches in order that their intended victims may not escape them. The wretched merchants and bankers, who have deluded themselves with the idea that they have secured their gold and silver by burying it sixteen feet under ground, or by cunningly concealing it inside the walls of their houses, are put to horrible tortures, and see their wives, children, and servants tortured. Woe to the man who has the reputation of being rich, and is unable to satisfy the dacoits. Death is to him a happy release from pain.

Let us not, for the sake of a miserable economy, ever again permit our name to be sullied by the tortures of thousands of our subjects, whom we have bound ourselves to protect. I beg to remind my countrymen of the atrocities which were annually perpetrated in many provinces of India until the Marquis of Hastings, in 1817, crushed the Pindarees. Permit me to quote one extract from Wilson's "British India":—

But their haste and rapacity tolerated no hesitation, and whoever was supposed to possess property, and was either unable or unwilling to satisfy the demands of the robbers, was put to the most cruel torture, and not unfrequently died under its infliction. Their brutality was equal to their cruelty, and the women escaped violation and murder only by a voluntary death. What the Pindarees could not carry away they destroyed; and their movements were to be tracked by the flames of the villages which they had set on fire after they had rifled them.—Chapter 5, page 190.

Let the English nation also recollect that we are doubly bound to protect the natives of India, for the English authorities in India have disarmed the latter in a harsh and, in some districts, in a very cruel manner.

The women of India may say, with Rose Bradwardine—

And we cannot defend ourselves as in old times, for the Government have taken all our arms; and my dear father is so rash (in India rich). Oh! what will become of us.—"Waverley," Chapter 15.

A correspondent of the Times has at last pointed out the probability of a rising among the Sonthals this year, but he has omitted to notice the disaffection which exists among the Rajpoot communities inhabiting the Gangetic Plain lying between the hills of the Sonthals and the Punjab. Like the Sonthals, the Rajpoots under the rule of the Civil Courts have been ground down by usurers, and, unless we employ them as a Militia, are likely to take to objectionable courses on the first favourable opportunity.

In paragraph 28 of its letter the Home Government asks to be informed of the stations in India which ought to be strengthened.

In India we must avoid shutting ourselves up behind fortifications. We must ever be ready to strike, to attack. To do so we must have railways. How is it that only 154 miles of railway were constructed during 1870? Do the English people prefer to lend their money for Russian, instead of for Indian, railways? We urgently require a railroad on the left bank of the Indus from Attock to Hyderabad. We urgently require another from Attock to Lahore, and a third from Delhi to Baroda. We need strengthening at Dera Ghazee Khan and Shikarpoor, for an invader would in these days push on his unnumbered swarms of horsemen and his light artillery from Candahar over the comparatively easy country south of the twenty-ninth degree of latitude. The deficiency of water in Sewestan, Cutch, Gundawa, and Sarawan, was formerly the great obstacle to invaders; this difficulty they can now overcome.—Your obedient servant, T.

THE STORE DEPARTMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Having observed in your issue of the 11th inst. the report of my own and Mr. Bedford's examination on the 8th inst. before the Committee of the House of Commons on Indian Finance, it is my duty to point out to you that this report is incorrect in nearly every particular, especially in the statement that this department charges 5 per cent. for agency. I have, therefore, to request you to publish this letter, and to request your readers to suspend their judgment till the evidence is published by authority of the House of Commons.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, GERALD C. TALBOT,

THE MOTIVES OF LORD MAYO'S ASSASSIN.

The Times of India thinks that the hypothesis of a subtle, deep laid conspiracy, so far, rests only on pure conjecture; and however it may be confirmed by evidence hereafter to be discovered, that is not one that pertains to the category of general causes. But though such a malevolent treasonable organisation did not exist before Earl Mayo's ill-fated voyage—only, at most, the latent elements of it lurking in the minds of a few malignants—is it not possible that the daily assertion, in conversation and in portions of the press, that there is such a standing menace to the State, may tend to call it into working order? May we not by insisting so much on the existence of plots, by positively asserting that "India swarms with active enterprising conspirators," be taking the very course to incite and almost taunt to overt acts the few hundreds of miscreants and fanatics who are always to be found in this vast oriental community, but who, without special suggestion, would merely brood over their murderous thoughts? When one ponders over the savagery of the deed, when the immeasurable contrast between the mere reptile-like condition of the mean, wretched Khyberite, and the intellectual quality and imperial value of his victim, it is impossible to restrain indignation, which, in the case of a Calcutta contemporary, has attained to a white heat, carrying the writer far beyond all mundane jurisdictions. True, if there be a rhemgherist or murder guild, having for its full aim the decimation of our leading men, that must be put down at any cost: but let us, at least, go about the business like reasonable, though justly angered men, so that our measures may hit the mark. Above all, let us avoid stirring up the fire we desire to quench.

The Friend of India observes that there is no body of religionists in the country that did not owe something to the charity and forbearance of Lord Mayo's rule. He was one of the last men in the world to allow any man's faith to interfere with his worldly prospects or comfort. The Mahomedans had in him a most lenient and dispassionate ruler, and so had the Hindoos. We think it is our duty to use every effort to prevent the crime of this one man, or of this one sect, to be imputed to the Mahomedans of India. It would be most lamentable if such an imputation gained ground among us. We should no more think of connecting the Mahomedans, as a body, with the Wahabee treason than we should think of connecting the Bengalee Baboo with the butcher murders in the Punjab. It is exceedingly important that the distinction should be drawn, and that no stigma should be affixed to an entire race for the crimes of a portion of it. We are quite satisfied that the respectable Mahomedans are horrified at the crime. We hope they will do something to make the fact known that no rule ever was endangered, and certainly no rule ever was destroyed, by assassinations. Probably the one thing arising from the death of Lord Mayo will be a more rigorous carrying out of the law. Perhaps, indeed—which God forbid—the innocent will suffer with the guilty before the chapter, which the murderer of the Viceroy began, shall have come to an end. As the matter stands, all that the assassin has done has been to take away the head of one noble family, and to carry mourning into every English household. The moment that Lord Mayo fell there was another to step into his place, as the soldier in battle steps forward into the place of a comrade who has fallen, and not a wheel of the state machinery has been thrown out of gear. The machinery works exactly as it did a month ago; the nation that mourns Lord Mayo could any moment find other distinguished men to step forward unhesitatingly to fill his place. By accomplishing his death one good ruler has been removed but the nation remains fearless, resolute, and stronger, not weaker, whenever she finds a man after a course of duty and labour like Lord Mayo's to die at his post. We fear, too, that the feeling in England, never more favourable to India than at the present moment, will run some danger of being unfavourably influenced by the assassination of the Viceroy. There are races which delight in the secret dagger, but they are not noble races, and never are influential. Sometimes a noble race becomes noted for assassinations, but never till the race is decayed, and at all events our own race, English, Irish, or Scotch, detests assassinations, even as a means of accomplishing what some people think the greatest ends. No cause ever was furthered by assassinations. No cause ever was defeated by them, save the cause that uses them. Our Mahomedan fellow subjects might do some good by making these facts known as widely as possible. Perhaps it might save some poor wretch from fancying that in perpetrating a great crime he was serving some political purpose, when in reality he is merely adding to political action a criminal feature which robs it of all possibility of sympathy, and degrades it to the lowest and meanest, and most cowardly grade known in human association.

IS IT A PLOT?

The Hindu Prakash remarks that, with regard to the sad catastrophe, coming as it does so fast upon the assassination of Justice Norman, doubts are naturally entertained whether it does not indicate some deep-laid conspiracy, which may one day burst out upon us. The assassins of the two highest functionaries of India have been Mahomedans, and have been suspected to belong to the Wahabee sect, which has some cause for being discontented on account of the trial of Ameer Khan and his associates. . . . That the act of such a wretch could be the ebullition of a wide-spread conspiracy of any class of her Majesty's subjects in India, passes one's comprehension. Even if it be the ebullition of more than personal discontent or fanaticism, it can have no political importance or significance. Any body of conspirators that can only act by dark, cowardly, wicked, and detestable murders, of the highest functionaries though they be, by the instrumentality of transported convicts and such other wretched fanatics, cannot be a great source of danger to the State, and will surely crush out themselves before they know they are crushed. For our part, we think, from the detailed information of the catastrophe that is now before the public, that it was purely an individual act and an accident. It so happens, however, that suspicion many a time works as much or even greater mischief than reality. The suspicion of a wide-spread conspiracy among any class of her Majesty's subjects will naturally work a change in the conduct of the ruling class, which cannot but breed mischief in the end. The signs of the times are somewhat serious, and require prompt and prudent investigation.

THE FAMINE IN LULLUPPORE.—A generous minute has been issued by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces on the effects of the famine in the Lullupore District. The spirit of the minute will be seen from this one clause which is all we can give this week:—"Add to this that the people, both ryots and proprietors, are for the most part miserably poor, and often heavily indebted. Colonel Davidson represented that he had pressed them harder for last year's revenue than he would have done had he been as well aware as he now is of the impoverished state of the agricultural population generally."

MADRAS SEVENTY YEARS AGO.—Mr. R. S. Edwards, late Collector of Customs at Rangoon, has recently retired from the service of the British Government, after an official career of more than fifty years; and he still retains a vivid recollection of old times and old scenes which have long since passed away from India and Burmah. He was born at Madras in 1802, just three years after the overthrow of Tipu Sultan and the capture of Seringapatam; in the days when there was no club and no cathedral, when the Nilgiri Hills were as little known as the mountains of Thibet, when Lord William Bentinck was Governor of Madras, and when the glorious little man, the far-seeing Marquis of Wellesley, was engaged in the all-important task of delivering India from the oppression of Mahratta supremacy. In those days Calcutta was already becoming a city of palaces. The old Government-house where Warren Hastings and Philip Francis quarrelled and fought, and which until a late period formed the public treasury, was being transferred to the spacious building which was then rapidly rising amidst the jungle of Chowringhee. Madras, however, was little more than a group of villages, with Fort St. George and Black Town on the strand, facing the sea; and was fast losing the importance which it had enjoyed in the days when Haidar and Tipu dominated over the south, and the French were in the ascendant in the Deccan. Anglo-Indian society was altogether different from what it is now. Communication with England was about once a year. Houses were small, and punkahs far from universal; life, though occasionally short, was generally genial and convivial; whilst there was a far higher tone in general society than existed in the days when English nabobs maintained Indian zenanas.—Mr. Wheeler's "Reminiscences of Ava." (Calcutta Review.)

INDIAN MUTINY RELIEF FUND.—The report of the committee of the Indian Mutiny Relief Fund for the year 1871 has just made its appearance. The statement showing the operations of the fund in the past year commences with an abstract of the balance-sheet, whereby we ascertain that the assets and receipts were as follows:—To balance from 31st December, 1870, £146,215. 13s. 3d.; to interest on securities, £5,394. 14s. 8d.; to repayment of loans, £5; total assets and receipts, £151,615. 7s. 11d. The expenditure to set against this was the sum of £11,327. 5s. 4d. for relief granted during the year 1871. The working expenses of the office (2, East India-avenue) for the year 1871 were £542. 16s. 1d. The balance in hand of the fund stood on 31st December, 1871, at £139,745. 6s. 6d. The subjoined statement shows the number and description of the various class of sufferers receiving relief from the fund on the 31st December, 1871:—Widows and other relatives of officers, civil and military, in the United Kingdom, 122; in India and the Colonies, 28; widows, &c., of soldiers and seamen in the United Kingdom, 359; in India and the Colonies, 21; orphan children at schools, 39; total recipients, 569. During the period under review the alterations show an actual decrease of 70 in the number of recipients, reducing the annual expenditure by the sum of £653. 6s. The following have been admitted to the benefit of the fund, viz., one officer's orphan, three soldiers' widows on second widowhood, one soldier's orphan. The following had ceased to receive allowances, viz., 9 sons of officers on attaining the prescribed age; 56 orphans of soldiers on attaining the prescribed age; 4 widows of soldiers married; 3 widows of soldiers deceased; 2 widows of soldiers commuted their allowance; 1 widow of soldier's allowance discontinued.

Bengal.

BENGAL CIVIL FUND.

At a half-yearly general meeting of subscribers to the Bengal Civil Fund, held at the Town-hall, Calcutta, on Wednesday, the 31st January, 1872 H. L. Dampier, Esq., in the chair, the following report was submitted by the managers:—

Subject to the approval of the subscribers, they have admitted to the benefits of the Fund under the new Rules, the following families:—

Mrs. Hardinge, £300; three children, £120—£120; less one-sixth under Rule 7, £70—£350. The widow and three children (two sons and a daughter) of the late Mr. B. Hardinge, who died in England on the 31st July last. Note.—A son died four days after death of father.

Lady Harrington, £300. The widow of the late Sir Henry Byng Harrington (an annuitant of 1865), who died in England on the 7th October last.

Mrs. Taylor, £300; four children, £400—£700. The widow and four daughters of the late Mr. W. T. Taylor (an annuitant of 1859), who died in England on the 23rd October last.

Mrs. Bidwell, £300. The widow of the late Mr. A. C. Bidwell (an annuitant of 1856), who died in England on the 10th November last.

Mrs. Bernard, an incumbent on the Fund, as being the widow of Mr. Block, has under Article (29) XXVIII. been readmitted to full benefits from the date of decease of her second husband. Her's is, however, one of the matiny pensions, and the Fund is repaid the amount by Government.

The votes of subscribers have affirmed the resolutions passed at the general meeting of the 26th July last, respecting the modifications of Articles XXIII. (24), IV. (5), and XXX. (31). It has also been agreed that the last mentioned rule have retrospective effect given it by the managers.

The widow of the late Mr. Cragio has applied, under the revised Rule, Article XXX., for the restoration to pensionary benefits of her son Manson, who was struck off the list of incumbents on attaining his majority in November, 1867. The managers have informed her that they will, subject to the usual confirmation of the general meeting, re-admit her son to pensionary benefits from the date that the rule came into effect, viz., 8th October last.

Mr. W. E. Money has intimated that his son, Mosley Sapte, who attained his majority on the 25th November, is incapable of earning his livelihood. Mr. Money has, at the same time, expressed his wish to continue subscriptions for this son, so that, in the event of his own decease, his son may be admitted to Fund benefits. The managers have informed him that he may, under Article IV. of the Revised Rules, continue payments, but that satisfactory medical proof of the existence of the incapacity is necessary.

In the Financial Despatch No. 108 of the 30th November, 1864, the Secretary of State for India intimated to the Government of Bombay that in the covenants of natives of India entering the Civil Service the rules requiring subscription to the civil funds of the services would be cancelled. To prevent mistakes in the cases of the native gentlemen who have recently been appointed to the Civil Service of this presidency, the Government of India has been asked whether this intention of the Secretary of State has been carried out. No reply has yet been received from Government.

The abolition of the Annuity Fund, to which the greater part of the cost of the joint office establishment of the two funds had hitherto been debited, made it necessary for the managers to revise the Civil Fund Office Establishment. Fortunately the Civil Fund is now in a position to support without difficulty its own proper charges. The managers have, however, in their arrangements had strict regard to economy, as well as to efficiency. The cost of the establishment of the Annuity and Civil Funds together was Rs. 1,274 per mensem. The mean cost of the revised Civil Fund Establishment is Rs. 806 per mensem. The secretary's salary has been reduced and fixed at Rs. 300. This is included in the above sum. As the abolition of the Annuity Fund has only reduced the work of the office about 13 per cent., the managers are of opinion that they have gone as far in the way of reduction as it is safe to venture.

After the resolutions were carried confirming the recent admissions to the Fund of pensioners, the attention of the chairman was called to the notice advertised, according to which Mr. H. S. Beadon was to bring forward a resolution for discussion, viz., that Articles 17 and 18 of the Rules of the Fund be amended so as to allow annuitants and other members of the Fund in England who were at present unable to transmit their votes in time, to do so in future; it was decided that, as Mr. Beadon was not present, and no other gentleman was willing to propose the resolution in question, the matter must for the present drop.

RECEPTION OF LORD MAYO'S REMAINS.

THE PROCESSION FROM PRINSEP'S GHAUT.

CALCUTTA, Feb. 17.—You will already—by your Special Correspondent—have been put in possession of the full proposed details of the ceremony for the reception of the remains of the late Viceroy, and their conveyance to Government House to-day. The programme was closely adhered to. The body had been landed some hours previously to the time appointed for the procession, at the Peninsular and Oriental steamer depot in Garden Reach. About three P.M. crowds of natives began to assemble in the neighbourhood of Prinsep's Ghaut, around the enclosures railed off for the arrangement of the procession. At half-past three the full Regiment of the Calcutta Volunteers marched down to the depot to join the other portion of the escort of the body from there. Very soldierly and well they looked. At four o'clock the troops appointed had all been stationed, and lined the road on both sides from Prinsep's Ghaut to Government House. The guns of the Royal Artillery had been wheeled into position, and the several deputations of the various public bodies had all taken up their appointed stations. By this time the crowd of people, of all classes, had become very great, but under the admirable arrangements of the police, conducted by the Commissioner in person, the most complete order and quiet prevailed. About a quarter to five the head of the procession commenced to move past, and the remaining sections gradually formed in. The Artillery guns saluted, followed by those of the Fort, and, at the same time, those of the ships of his Majesty of Siam, moored off the Ghaut. The bands, playing a funeral march, moved slowly on, and the procession, formed of hundreds of the first men of the city, and numbers of the respectable inhabitants of all classes, with no sound heard but the measured tread of footsteps, the booming of the guns, and the solemn sacred music, marched by the line of shipping moored along the river's bank; on every ship were present a greater or less number of ladies, all in mourning, to witness the sad spectacle. As the procession neared the houses, the crowd became denser, and it was seen that every roof and window around the Palace-square was filled with fair and mournful faces. Many a tear was shed, as mothers watched Lord Mayo's little son, walking all alone, pale, quiet, and sad, just behind the gun carriage, drawn by six horses, which bore all that was left of his noble father. As the head of the cavalcade wheeled into the square of Government House the Volunteers and the troops filed off to their assigned positions, the officials took up their places, the Artillery boomed out again, the coffin was stopped at the centre of the grand staircase, and the chief mourners stood by it (in their centre the pale, sad looking boy), whilst, the bands continuing their mournful, solemn dirge, the public deputations and others marched by with uncovered heads, and sorrowing, kindly sympathy marked on every face. A platform with tram rails, covered with black cloth, reached from the bottom to the top of the staircase, along its centre. Up this, on a wheeled truck, the body of the murdered Viceroy once again passed beneath that roof which but a few short days ago he left in health and strength. Mourned for he is by all classes, and regretted he ever will be.

Never has Calcutta witnessed so solemn and mournful a pageant as that of to-day, and there is no human being but will pray that it may never witness such another. If the miscreant who caused it could have realised it beforehand, even with such a wretch it must have stayed his murderous blow. Amongst the vast crowd of natives lining the sides of the roads so quiet, decorous, and respectful an attitude was never before observed on the occasion of any State ceremony. Hundreds of them must have left the scene, sorrowing for the foul treachery which struck such widespread grief.

THE LYING IN STATE.

CALCUTTA, Feb. 20.—The Lying in State continues to-day, and hundreds have attended at Government House. The troops in garrison, and from Dum-Dum, both European and Native, after the closing hour for the public in the morning, passed in, in companies of fifty at a time, and marched slowly past the coffin. With to-day this sad portion of the State ceremonies will end. I send you the Gazette Extraordinary, issued to-day by Government, notifying the ceremonial to take place to-morrow morning, the 21st of February, in connection with the removal of the remains of the late Viceroy to her Majesty's ship Daphne. Many will be disappointed of their desire to pay the last tribute of respect in their power, owing to the limited space available in the proposed procession. The Secretaries to Government in the Foreign Department are assigning the tickets with every spirit of fairness to satisfy all parties as far as is practicable.—Times of India Correspondent.

THE FUNERAL SERVICE.

CALCUTTA, Feb. 21, 2 P.M.—This morning a solemn funeral service was conducted by the Bishop and clergy in front of Government House. Afterwards the remains of Earl Mayo were conveyed to the Custom-house jetty, and embarked on board the steamer Daphne. The procession was similar to that of last Saturday, but its length was restricted on account of the short distance to be traversed:—

Volunteers, marching in fours, with arms reversed.

Bands of the 14th and 107th Regiments.

The Viceroy's Body-guard.

The Viceroy's Band.

The Bishop, with two Chaplains.

The Body, on a gun-carriage drawn by twelve horses, with Aides-de-Camp walking at each side.

The Chief Mourners.

Sailors and Marine officers of H.M.S. Glasgow and Daphne.

The Acting Governor-General.

The remainder of the procession was the same as that on Saturday, excepting that the deputations from each public body consisted of two gentlemen only. At the entrance to the jetty the horses were taken from the gun-carriage, which was then drawn by the sailors and placed on board. During the procession minute guns were fired. The Daphne then proceeded down the river, receiving a Royal salute from the Fort. At Saugor the body will be placed on board the Glasgow, which then proceeds to Bombay, where Lady May will embark for England.—Times of India.

Miscellaneous.

MAJOR PARSONS, Deputy Commissioner of Simla, has been appointed Deputy Commissioner of Ludiana, in the place of Mr. Cowan, who has been suspended.

CHOLERA ON BOARD THE "DAPHNE."—Cholera, we regret to learn, has broken out on board H.M.S. Daphne, which vessel has figured so prominently in connection with the event over which India has been mourning. Sub-Lieutenant Gear has died, and the captain, the surgeon, and several others have been attacked. Though dangerously ill for some time, these officers are now expected to recover as the vessel is by this time out at sea, away from the pestiferous influences of the fetid Hooghly. In answer to telegrams sent from Calcutta, replies have been received that all on board ship are hopeful of the speedy recovery of those stricken down, and of good health on board for the future.

THE ACTING GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S STAFF.—The officers acting on the staff of Lord Napier of Merchistoun at Calcutta consist of Colonel N. G. Campbell, Royal Artillery, Military Secretary; Major Burne, Private Secretary; and Lieutenants C. L. C. de Roebuck, 60th Rifles; and the Hon. J. S. Napier, 92nd Highlanders, Aides-de-Camp. Colonel C. F. Fordyce, his lordship's own private secretary proceeds immediately to England. Captain Gore, 84th Regiment remains at Madras as Aide-de-Camp to Mr. Arbuthnot, the acting Governor, and Lieutenant Hope rejoins his regiment. Of the late Governor-General's staff Major C. C. Taylor, Bengal Staff Corps, and Captains H. B. Lockwood, Bengal Army, R. H. Grant, Royal Artillery, and F. H. Gregory, 15th Hussars, all lose their appointments.

CIVIL.—CALCUTTA, Feb. 17.—You may perhaps have heard that the following changes take place in the Bengal Service:—Mr. D. Jenkins and Mr. S. Simson, Commissioners of Patna and Dacca, retire from the service next month; and Mr. Rivers Thompson, Secretary to the Government of Bengal, and Mr. Stuart Hogg take leave to England for eighteen months. Lord Ulick Browne, it is reported, is to have the choice of Patna or the Municipal Commissionership; some say Mr. Stuart Bayley, being on the spot, and having officiated as Acting-Governor of Bengal, has the better chance of this favourite berth; but Lord Ulick Browne is long senior, and has claims Mr. Campbell cannot with justice pass over. In the event of this appointment being made, Mr. Stuart Bayley will go to Dacca. Mr. Bernard will officiate for Mr. Rivers Thompson; who is to officiate for Mr. Stuart Hogg is not yet known. Lord Ulick Browne arrived by the steamer before last, and is now on his way to Calcutta.—Times of India Correspondent.

BEYOND THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER.—The Ameer Shere Ali seems now to be directing his attention to mechanics. Workshop tools have been ordered from Lahore, likewise a fire-engine. Nothing daunted by the questionable success that has attended the construction of barracks in India, his Highness has determined upon having a cantonment and a prison, after the English style, at Cabul. The prison is to be for Cabulee malefactors only; Punjabee and Hindostanee budmashes will be sent to India as formerly. The Ameer is also determined to put down excessive funeral expenses, and has ordered proclamation to be made that whoever incurs unnecessary expense on these occasions shall be fined a thousand rupees. Yacoub Khan, regarding whom rumour is never silent, is said to have "fortified Herat," and to have issued positive orders that no Englishman be allowed to enter the town. The news from Bokhara represents the Russians as building more durable and more extensive cantonments at Charjoee than those in which their garrison has hitherto been located there. And of whatever article of supply the Cossacks may be in want, they certainly need not suffer for want of tea. There are said to be thirty lakhs' worth of hill tea from India at present in Turkestan, or the marts upon which large dealers chiefly indent. As before, this hill tea commands a more ready sale and a better price than that from China. But, with such an enormous quantity in the market, well may the news-writer remark that, in all probability, the man who disposes of his stock first will make most profit.—Times of India.

LORD MAYO'S MURDERER.—The Indian Daily News says that a petition signed by a Mahomedan, and addressed to the Chief Justice, was received a few days ago by the High Court in its Appellate jurisdiction, professing to throw light on the assassination of Mr. Justice Norman, and naming some person or persons at Patna as accomplices. The petition came from Delhi.—The murderer of Lord Mayo has been condemned to death, and the sentence has been laid before the Appellate Court of Calcutta for confirmation. At the trial another convict, who gave evidence, said that when the assassin heard of the execution of Mr. Justice Norman's murderer he was much affected by the news. He also said that he gave a feast to his co-religionists on the occasion, and referred in a mysterious manner to some great event that was to take place. Shere Ali spoke of Abdullah as his bhaie, relative. He might have spoken, however, only of tribal relationship. His manner was very insolent throughout the trial. He said that he would make a statement before he was executed, but not earlier, as it might appear that he begged for mercy.

THE FINANCE COMMITTEE.—We should like to remind the Hindoos, of Calcutta especially, that the time for the Finance Committee meeting has come, and to urge once more the advisability of sending a Hindoo deputation to England. If this is not done we are certain the omission will be regretted. The mistake however will be the common one of Bengal. The first idea always is to engage an Englishman to represent in England Hindoo views and interests. Some time ago there was talk of engaging Mr. Fawcett, one of the most comically absurd ideas ever known. No Englishman worthy of the name—unless a lawyer who acted as for a client—would be "engaged" and paid, directly or indirectly, to represent the views of Bengal. Nor could he represent them, however much he inclined to do so. As a matter of duty men like Mr. Fawcett will speak out, but they cannot be made into delegates. Our view is strong that some Bengalees ought to go to England. There are two purely Hindoo and singularly able and upright papers in Calcutta—the Patriot and the Bengalee. Why not put the papers—as the Great Seal is sometimes put—into commission and induce the Editors with some other persons to go to England? The service to India would be immense, and really there ought not to be any need on our part to urge it as a duty.—Friend of India.

EMBARKATION OF LORD NAPIER FOR CALCUTTA.

Lord and Lady Napier yesterday evening bade farewell to Madras, and the scene on the beach and pier while they were taking their departure from the pier to the steamer Patna, which was to convey them to Calcutta, was a very grand and interesting one. A large tent had been pitched near the pier, and in it, a little after half-past four o'clock, a brilliant and fashionable assembly had come together. It is no exaggeration when we say that the gathering was the largest that has ever taken place on the arrival or departure of any Governor. There were to be seen his Highness the Prince of Arcot, their Highnesses the Princes of Travancore, his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, the Honourable A. J. Arbuthnot, and the other members of Council, the Honourable the Judges of the High Court, and the other leading representatives of the civil and military services. There was also a very large attendance of the fair sex. The Hindu community was represented by the Hon. V. Ramaingar, the Hon. Gajapathi Ran, Mr. Nursing Ran, Moothoswamy Iyer, Mr. Runganada Moodelly, Mr. Vigiagaraloo Chetty, Mr. Vencataswamy Nadu, Mr. Ragoonatha Row, Mr. Ramachandra Row, &c. Two companies of H.M.'s 2-21st Fusiliers, with full complement of officers, and their colours and band, and the Volunteer Guards, with their colours and band, lined the two sides of the pier. The road along the beach from the Fort to the pier was lined with crowds of people, and crowds of people were assembled on the upper storeys and terraces of all the public buildings near the pier. At a quarter after five o'clock Lord and Lady Napier arrived, being escorted by the Body Guard, who met His Lordship at Brigadier-General Neill's Statue. His Highness the Prince of Arcot and the Hon. A. J. Arbuthnot received Lord and Lady Napier, who then proceeded to the tent and met the ladies and gentlemen assembled there. Lord Napier, after exchanging a few words with his Highness the Prince of Arcot, was conducted by the Hon. R. S. Ellis to a deputation of the Hindu community who had expressed a desire to wait upon his Lordship and present him with a farewell address. On his Lordship being introduced to the deputation, Mr. Runganada Moodelly, M.A. stepped forward, and read the following address:—

To H.E. the Right Hon. Francis Baron Napier, K.T., &c., &c., &c.

May it please Your Excellency,—Your Lordship's sudden departure from Madras consequent on the sad event which has deprived the empire of the services of the Statesman whose loss we all deplore, precludes our expressing to you in a fitting manner our sense of the benefits derived from your Lordship's able and popular administration of this presidency during the nearly six years you have held the reins of Government.

2. The deep interest your Lordship has always taken in everything affecting the welfare and improvement of this presidency; your humane and vigilant efforts to ward off the terrible effects of famine which unfortunately so often recurs in this tropical country; the introduction of Municipal Government which marked the earlier part of your Lordship's administration; the development which this useful institution has since received under the watchful care of your Lordship's Government and the marked amelioration which has taken place in the sanitary and material condition of the chief Mofussil towns; the intimate knowledge of the condition and requirements of the people gained by your personal visits to almost every district of this Presidency; your large-hearted sympathy with the poor, the sick, and the afflicted, as evidenced by the present condition of dispensaries, hospitals, choultries, asylums, and jails of every description, and by the state of perfection to which especially the Monekar Choultry at the Presidency town has been brought by your Lordship's unceasing personal attention; the encouragement your Lordship has uniformly given to higher education and to educated natives; the comprehensive scheme of elementary education for the masses which has just been inaugurated, and forms the crowning and closing act of your Lordship's administration; your cultivated taste and uncommonly high appreciation of the genius and character of the people of this ancient country; your desire for reviving and preserving whatever is useful and of interest in our ancient art and civilisation; the many substantial memorials we have of your Lordship's connexion with Madras, which, as a city, has been so much improved in its buildings and general appearance within the last six years; your warm regard for the princes and nobility of the country and your desire for their improvement; the urbanity and the courtesy which have ever marked your Excellency's and Lady Napier's intercourse with the natives—are points on which we should have dwelt as prominent features of your Lordship's administration had time permitted our doing so. As it is, we can only beg your Lordship to accept this hurried and feeble expression of our feelings on the part of the native community, as a tribute of their esteem and gratitude; and we further request the favour of your sitting for your portrait either at Calcutta or on your Lordship's return to England, for which purpose we desire to make the necessary arrangements with a competent artist. This portrait, when completed, we propose placing, with the permission of the authorities concerned, in the Senate-house of the Madras University, designed, sanctioned, and commenced under your Lordship's Government, and which is now in course of construction. The foundation of a scholarship at your Lordship's expense in connection with the Madras University; the contribution made by you in common with ourselves towards the cost of the Hindu Female Normal School opened last year; the establishment of a girls' school in the name of Lady Napier in one of the most important of our provincial towns; the erection of a school house for orphans in the Monegar Choultry; the Napier water pandal, near the People's Park; the projected school in the Napier Park, and the restoration of that noble monument of native art, namely, Tirumala Naick's Palace at Madura—are some of the enduring monuments we already have in our midst for perpetuating your Lordship's name among us; but we desire to have a portrait of your Lordship as a small token of our appreciation of your useful labours for our good.

Wishing your Excellency and Lady Napier a long life of happiness, and trusting that your Lordship has yet before you a long career of usefulness, during which we feel sure your Lordship will continue to interest yourself in the affairs of this Presidency, we bid your Excellency a hearty farewell.—We remain your Lordship's most obedient servants. Madras, Feb. 19, 1872.

Lord Napier made a brief and appropriate reply. His Lordship said that it was hardly necessary for him to express his gratification and gratitude at receiving this last token of the esteem and regard of the native community. He was thankful to them for their good wishes for himself and Lady Napier. Whatever he might have done amiss, or left undone, of this he was fully conscious, that he had always endeavoured faithfully to represent the feelings of her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen towards the poorest and meanest of her Majesty's subjects, and if he had succeeded in this he had gained the highest reward and could rest satisfied. His Lordship expressed his approval of the manner in which they intended to show their esteem for himself and Lady Napier. He concluded by wishing them farewell. His Lordship was very much affected when replying. After this Lord and Lady Napier took leave of those present and were conducted to the pier, and Lady Napier proceeded to the place of embarkation in one of the pier carriages, which was fitted up for the occasion, and Lord Napier walked by the side of the carriage. The Volunteer band struck up the National Anthem, as the party proceeded from the land end of the pier, and the soldiers presented arms on either side, as the party advanced. When Lord and Lady Napier arrived at the place on the pier from which they were to embark, the band of the Fusiliers played the National Anthem. Here Lord and Lady Napier shook hands with the ladies and gentlemen who followed them from the tent in large numbers, and then were conducted to the boats that had been prepared for them. Lord Napier, accompanied by the Master Attendant, proceeded in the Port boat, and Lady Napier was conveyed to the steamer in a ship's boat, Colonel Napier Campbell and Colonel Fordyce accompanying her Ladyship. When Lord and Lady Napier were proceeding from the pier to the steamer, the Garrison band played "Auld Lang Syne," and the spectators on the pier cheered long and heartily, and Lord and Lady Napier waved their hands in reply as long as they could be seen. A Royal salute was fired on the embarkation of Lord Napier and on the steamer quitting the roads.—Madras Times, Feb. 20.

Miscellaneous.

MILITARY STAFF.—We hear that Captain Stewart, now officiating as Military Secretary to the Governor of Madras, has been appointed Military Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Mysore, and that Captain Walter Campbell, of the Body Guard, is to act as Military Secretary to Mr. Arbuthnot.—Madras Times.

THE COOUM RIVER.—The River Cooum is becoming worse and worse every day. The number of mud islands are increasing, and the effluvia in a little time will be somewhat dreadful. If anything can be done for the good of this dirty stream, it ought to be done at once, before we feel the evil consequences of the state of things that we now see.—Madras Times.

DISTRESS IN GANJAM.—Latest reports from Ganjam are not cheering. Rain there has been none, and consequently water becomes more scarce every day, and the prospect is said to be such as to engender the suspicion that matters will grow worse before they mend. It is not considered likely that much rain will fall for several months, and till then there must be plenty of privation in store for the poor inhabitants of the district.

LANDS FOR PLANTING.—The Madras Government sometime back proposed some modifications with regard to granting land for planting purposes in the Wynad, and on the Neilgherry Hills. The modifications were then sent to the Secretary of State for his sanction. The Secretary of State in reply said that they had been made by the Governor in Council after very careful enquiry, and that they appeared to be fully justified by the facts stated in the correspondence which accompanied the despatch, and accordingly he fully approved of and sanctioned them.

OUTRAGES AT BANGALORE.—Bangalore has been the scene of two more outrages upon soldiers. At the end of last week, as two artillerymen were passing through the bazaar they were set upon by a number of natives and severely mauled. Again, last Monday a soldier of the Hussars was pelted with stones in the same locality. The police cannot, or will not, do anything in the matter. It is feared that the soldiers will take the matter into their own hands, unless something is very soon done to remedy the evil.—Madras Times, Feb. 24.

IN THE PERSIAN GULF.

At six A.M. of the 2nd January we anchored in the sheltered roadstead of Muscat, the capital and chief port of Oman, now in possession of Iuan Syed Toorkoe. The water is deep enough for large ships to anchor very near the shore, and at a few miles eastward on our track we had, according to the charts, passed over soundings of 2,020 fathoms with mud bottom, or depths of over two and a quarter miles. What a leisurely descent for the sailor, as Byron expresses it—

When, for a moment, like a drop of rain,
He sinks into thy depths with bubbling groan,
Without a grave, unknelt, uncoffined, and unknown.

It is a favourite theory with some that the depths of the sea corresponds with the elevation of the land. But though this may be the case sometimes, it is not so here, nor around the shores of Muscat harbour. The hills, several of which are fortified, rise from 500 to 600 feet high, far higher than the bay is deep, while the mountains a few miles to the S.W. rise to the height of six or even eight thousand feet. In Muscat there was very little shipping—H.M.S. Bullfinch and a few country traders being all. The city contains about twenty thousand inhabitants, chiefly Arabs, though there are many Sidhis or Africans from Zanzibar, and a sprinkling of Hindoo Borahs; is poorly built, though the houses along the beach, some of which were built by the Portuguese, present a strong and pleasing appearance. In the forts are a number of rusty old iron guns, of various calibre. Some appear to have been spiked, and then again bored out, as some of the touch holes are an inch or more in diameter. One large brass gun, about eleven feet long, is much indented in places by shot. It bears the date 1628, the Roman letters P. D. B. (which I interpreted "Public Department of Blunders"), and the figures 43-3-17 near the breach, and near the trunnions within a square, the following letters, thus—

D A C I D A
A F E S E N O
A D E 1628

The forts, though presenting outwardly a new appearance, are tumbling to ruin, having been greatly injured in the disturbances and fights connected with the late succession to the government, about two or three years ago. There is a bazaar well stocked with dates and halwa, fruit and vegetables, piece goods, &c.; but it is narrow, tortuous, and dirty, and covered with mats to defend the goods from sun or rain. The Portuguese, it will be remembered, held this place in the time of their maritime prospective from 1597 to 1648, when probably it had a greater trade than at present.

The rates on China for 60 days' sight drafts are quoted at Rs. 217 per 100 dollars. SHARES: The market has shown more steadiness than for some time back, and values of nearly all Securities have improved considerably.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

Referring to G.O.C. No. 976 of 1869, the C. in C. is pleased to publish the following letter from the Horse Guards for information and guidance, and it is to be placed in future before all District Courts-martial.

The Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief having noticed the somewhat indiscriminate manner in which the power given to District Courts-martial to award discharge from the service with ignominy . . . has been exercised, I have received his Royal Highness's commands to call the particular attention of confirming officers to the subject, with a view to the remission of such sentence, except in cases of disgraceful conduct, or confirmed and habitual drunkenness.

2. With regard to cases of the latter description, confirming officers should bear in mind the instructions laid down in the confidential letter from this Department of April 20, 1869:—

"The 117th Article of War gives power to the Court to sentence the prisoner . . . to be discharged from the service. This power is, however, one which must be used with much discretion, and care should be taken that only soldiers whose incorrigible habits of drunkenness are well ascertained, shall be brought to trial with a view to their discharge from the service."

Confirming officers are reminded that the directions issued through the Department of the Deputy Judge Advocate-general of the Army, in Circular letters No. 219 and No. 3, respectively dated April 8, 1870, and January 1, 1872, in respect of sentences of discharge with ignominy, continue in full force.

Official Papers.

REDUCTION OF THE NATIVE INDIAN ARMY.

From the Secretary of State for India to the Governor general of India in Council.

London, May, 1871.

MY LORD,—I have considered in Council your Lordship's military letter, dated April 1, 1871, acknowledging the receipt of my military despatch No. 72 of March 2, and, pending your reply thereto, pointing out an error in para. 4 of that despatch, which you consider to require correction.

2. I observe, upon reference to the paragraph in question, that, in calling your attention to a statement made in a previous (financial) despatch, the figure 13 has been inserted in the printed despatch instead of 15.

3. Your Lordship will observe that the error does not appear in any original statement of an asserted fact, but in an allusion to, and recapitulation of, statements made in a former letter, and that a simple reference to that letter at once shows it to be a clerical error or misprint, not materially affecting the general sense of the despatch in which it occurs.

4. In para. 6 your Lordship observes that "the year 1862-63, which has been chosen for the purpose of comparison, was an exceptional year, for that few stores were purchased, the Native army had not been reorganised, and in Bengal, at least, was short of its establishment, while a regular system of home reliefs had not commenced."

5. Although no direct reply has been received from you to the financial despatch in which the comparison was made, the subject was, to some extent, dealt with by your Lordship, in a letter No. 358 of 1869, which was answered by my despatch in the Financial Department, No. 53 of 1870. I shall, therefore, only remark on the present occasion that, as the comparison was made upon the only safe ground, viz., that of the cost per man of effective soldiers in relation to certain departmental charges, it does not appear either that the fact of the Native army in Bengal having been short of its establishment, or the fact, not mentioned by your Lordship, of the European force having been larger in that year than in 1869-70, would affect the argument at all; while, with regard to the other two points noticed, I have no reason to suppose that the reorganisation of the Native army has led to increased expenditure, or that the new system of transport, the cost of which, so far as relates to sums paid in India, had been, until 1870-71, omitted altogether from the Indian accounts, has been more expensive than the old system which existed in 1862-63.—I have, &c.,

ARGYLL.

From the Governor general in Council to the Secretary of State for India :—

Simla, June 23, 1871.

MY LORD DUKE,—We have the honour to acknowledge your Grace's despatch, No. 72, dated March 2, 1871, replying to our despatch, No. 285, of Oct. 3, 1870, and reviewing the circumstances under which discussion has arisen in respect to a reduction of the Native army.

2. We deeply regret the misapprehension which has existed on our part with regard to the wishes and intentions of her Majesty's Government as to the reduction of force in the Native army. Until we received in the despatch under reply the intimation that, in your Grace's opinion there was no word in your communication of Jan. 26, 1869, "which contemplated any reduction in the strength of the army, or placed the Government of India under any pressure to make such reduction in order to effect the contemplated saving," we were under the impression that you desired that such a reduction should be made.

3. We fully accept your Grace's assertion that we have mistaken the views of her Majesty's Government, but we hope that the following remarks will show that the misapprehension was not unnatural, and that, in the absence of any expression of opinion to the contrary in the several communications which we have received, we were, until the receipt of the despatch under reply, justified in supposing that a reduction in force formed part of the means by which the saving in military expenditure of one million and a-half suggested by your Grace was to be effected.

4. At the close of 1868, when your Grace entered upon office, H.M.'s Government had certainly no reason to believe that the then Government of India intended to recommend any immediate reduction in the force of the Native army.

5. The opinions held in 1867 by Lord Sandhurst, then Commander-in-Chief, and the late Sir H. Durand, may be thus stated, that, although the Bengal Native Army could not safely be diminished, yet that a certain number of Madras and Bombay regiments might be reduced, should it be thought that such a state would not be opposed to general policy, with reference to the numerous changes in those armies which had taken place within the two previous years. It was on the latter ground, apparently, that an opinion adverse to reduction was then given.

6. When, therefore, early in 1869, our attention was called by your Grace to the large cost of our army, and when you expressed the opinion that it might be possible to bring the whole military charge in India, including stores, to a million and a half below the present amount, it was not unnatural for us to conclude that, in your opinion, those reasons of general policy which alone appear to have prevented the Government of Lord Lawrence from recommending a reduction in the Madras and Bombay armies, could no longer be urged, and that the time had come when a reduction of force might be effected in the whole Native army in India, which would not be open to the objections stated in 1867.

7. We desire here to observe that the same high military authorities just referred to (Lord Sandhurst and the late Sir Henry Durand) arrived at the same opinion; for they cordially concurred in the necessity for, and the mode of, the reductions proposed in our despatch of Oct. 4, 1869.

8. Further, we were strengthened in this opinion from the observations made in the ninth paragraph of your despatch of January, 1869, wherein it was stated that, when the new police system was organised, an expectation was entertained that the increased charge on that account would, in some measure, be met by a reduction in military expenditure.

9. This appeared to us to point clearly to a diminution in the strength of the army, inasmuch as the increase of the numbers of the police could have no effect upon military charge, except by rendering possible the reduction of the numbers of the army consequent upon a portion of their duties being discharged by the newly-organised police force.

10. Moreover, in the twenty-seventh paragraph of your despatch of January, 1869, your Grace pressed upon us the necessity of a general and searching review of military expenditure in all its branches, "on the same principle as that adopted in 1859-60."

11. One of the leading features of that principle was a reduction in force, amounting to nineteen British regiments and fifty-seven Native infantry regiments, effecting thereby a saving of more than two millions sterling.

12. But, in truth, it would have been impossible to have attempted to fulfil your Grace's suggestion, that a saving of £1,500,000 should be effected in any other way; for, if every grant* for the effective services of India, excluding only the regimental pay, allowances, and charges, which were not to be touched, and the commissariat, which was already, when its receipts were taken into account, below the sum fixed in the despatch, had been reduced at once by one-half, the saving would still have fallen short of the sum named by your Grace.

13. With reference to the statement as to the increase of military expenditure since 1862-63, referred to in the fourth paragraph of your despatch, we have already pointed out the misapprehensions into which your Grace was led by the inclusion of the home charges in the latter year's estimates, and their exclusion from those of the former, which thereby caused an error in the calculation of two out of three millions sterling.

Note.—After this despatch was written, No. 138, dated India-office, May 24, 1871, was received. This will be separately replied to.

14. We are about to address your Grace in a separate despatch on the subject of that increase, and it will be sufficient, therefore, for the moment, to refer to the following summary of the statement on military expenditure which was made by our colleague, Major general Norman, in the Legislative Council in March last.

"It will be seen from the foregoing memorandum that the increased expenditure was either unavoidable, as occurring under fixed regulations, or owing to war or famine, except in various cases where efforts were made to improve the position of the officers or soldiers of nearly every branch of the service; notably in the great addition to the British soldiers' pay in 1867-68, which alone cost a third of a million sterling. To show how much variation there may be in charges of different years, I would mention that about a million sterling was added to the Home estimates in 1865-66, 1866-67, and 1867-68, for the construction of the five overland transports; while the sea transport charges, which were very small in India in the years 1861-62, 1863-64, owing to relief of British troops being for the most part suspended, rose to £354,000 in 1864-65, when a regular system of relief recommenced."

15. Although objecting to the mode in which we have proposed to effect an economical reduction in our native army expenditure, your Grace admits that a reduction of military expenditure, in so far as it can be effected with perfect safety, is much required by the financial condition of the country, and you authorise our making it by diminishing the rank and file in certain regiments, within a maximum limit of 9,000 men in all, a portion of the reduction being effected, should we desire it, by breaking up certain cadres in the Bengal army.

16. It is necessary that we should place on record our reasons for thinking this mode of reduction inexpedient.

17. Excluding the Punjab frontier force and Goorkha regiments, the strength of which we consider it most expedient to reduce, and two regiments of Madras Native infantry in the Straits and China paid for by her Majesty's Government, there are 113 regiments of Native infantry in the three presidencies. To reduce 9,000 men without touching the Goorkha or frontier regiments, and allowing the reduction of 600 men in Assam and the Cossyah Hills, a measure which recent events have shown to be very questionable, it would be necessary to strike off (in addition to thirty-six men from each Bombay cavalry regiment, or 252 in all), about seventy-two men from each infantry regiment, leaving an establishment of 528 sepoys. Cavalry reductions, beyond that proposed in the Bombay army, are not, we think, possible with the present weak establishment of 384 privates in Bengal, and 300 in Madras regiments. This would effect a reduction of 8,988 or 8,388 men, according to whether the Assam regiments were or were not specially reduced.

18. The financial result would be to effect a saving of about £96,000 in the first year, and eventually of £131,600, without the Assam reductions, or of about £100,000 in the first year, and £138,000 eventually, if the Assam reductions take effect. The proposals made by us in 1869, for reductions in native cavalry and infantry were calculated to effect a final saving of £284,000 per annum, and those made in October, 1870, would have caused the saving in the first year of £156,000, and eventually of £230,000.

19. With the present regimental strength of 600 men, the number actually available for service is very small, and to still further reduce the establishment by seventy-two men would, in our opinion, be absolutely fatal to efficiency. Much, therefore, as we regret to forego an appre-liable saving in our military expenditure, we cannot give our adhesion to a measure which, for no greater advantage than a saving of one per cent. on our army estimate, would render many of our Native regiments inefficient for service.

20. Your Grace has given us the option of reducing certain regiments in Bengal as part of the reduction of 9,000 men, but we think it would be most inexpedient to break up regiments in one Presidency only, and we have carefully avoided recommending any such course in our previous proposals.

21. Your Grace desires us to review the whole distribution of the native army in the Presidencies of Bengal and Bombay. This can be done at once; but we submit that such a question, which must vary from time to time according to the circumstances of the year, may safely be left to the judgment of the Government of India, who have the best means for forming an opinion on the subject, and who only can satisfactorily decide on the best local disposition of the Imperial forces.

22. Your Grace, in para. 26 of the despatch under reply, remarks that no data have been ever furnished as to the alleged cost of the Madras sepoy. Information on this point was, however, afforded in page 117 of the enclosures of our despatch No. 349 of Oct. 4, 1869, in which it is shown that the actual cost of the Madras sepoy considerably exceeds that of the sepoy of Bengal. This extra expense is, moreover, greatly increased when he serves out of his own Presidency, in illustration of which we attach a statement of the extra cost of Madras regiments in Saugor over Bengal regiments in the same district. In more detailed statements, which we shall hereafter send, it will be seen that the Madras sepoy also costs more than the sepoy of Bombay.

23. We forward a minute recorded by our honourable colleague, Major-general Norman, on the remarks made by your Grace personal to himself. We have in this despatch designedly avoided any reference to the question of the relative value of the Madras and the Bengal sepoy as being one which, in our opinion, no argument or discussion is likely to settle.

24. We desire now briefly to express our views upon the whole question, and our deep regret that those views have not hitherto been concurred in by her Majesty's Government.

25. Three plans have been carefully considered by us since our first proposal was made, and nothing has occurred to shake our opinion in the prudence and wisdom of that proposal.

26. The second plan, as your Grace justly observes, was suggested by us principally as a compromise, in the hopes of obtaining your Grace's acquiescence. As compared with the first recommendation, we consider it extremely defective.

27. For the reasons above stated, we think that the third plan, as now suggested in the last despatch, would, without any proportionate financial advantage, weaken the efficiency of the whole Indian Army.

28. We do not desire to continue this controversy further. We shall, as in duty bound, endeavour to carry into effect whatever orders your Grace may issue, but we cannot think that any decision, except one based upon the principle of our first proposal, can ever settle this important question.

29. We believe that a very large reduction in the number of regiments which form the Madras army is inevitable. On this very ground our colleague, Mr. Ellis, dissented from the second plan above, in so far as it did not reduce the Madras army sufficiently. It will be impossible to continue for any lengthened period to tax the people of India for the support of a force which has been declared by the highest authorities in the Presidency to be far beyond the wants of the province, and which, from its expense, and from the nature of the races from whom it is recruited, is known to this Government to be unsuitable as a reserve for the main army of India.

30. We say nothing on the question as to the formation of a reserve for our Native army; but, if the propriety of such a reserve were to be used as an argument against our view, then we would urge our belief that the materials for that reserve are not to be found among the races which form the elements of the army of the Southern Presidency.

31. It is true to a certain extent that the financial difficulties of last year brought the subject of army expenditure more immediately to our notice; but, were our finances in the most prosperous state, had surpluses been obtained equal to the deficits which have of late years occurred, our opinion would have been the same. We cannot think that it is right to compel the people of this country to contribute one farthing more to military expenditure than the safety and defence of the country absolutely demand.

32. We enclose a minute by H.E. the C. in C. in India, who does not concur in this despatch.—We are, &c.

Minute by Major General Norman, C.B., on despatch from the Secretary of State, of March 2, 1871, regarding proposed reductions in the Native Army.

In this despatch, received as I was on the eve of starting for Burmah, the Secretary of State, I regret to find, takes exception to the style of my minute forwarded with the despatch from this Government of Oct. 3, 1870, and especially to certain expressions in it.

I have to apologise for having used expressions to which the Secretary of State so strongly objects; but I desire to point out certain circumstances which have placed me at a considerable disadvantage in this matter, and which, indeed, have probably led to these expressions ever coming on record at all, or reaching the Secretary of State in any shape.

As a matter of procedure, therefore, I must submit that I was compelled, without any real option on my part, to allow an informal note, circulated to my colleagues, to go to the Secretary of State as a minute; and, secondly, to allow that minute to go accompanied by a second reply to it from the Commander in Chief, and without any observations of my own upon that second reply, in which I was somewhat pointedly referred to.

While, therefore, I am extremely sorry that my language has called forth the animadversion of the Duke of Argyll, I cannot but feel that I have been placed at a great disadvantage by the circumstances I have above related.

At the same time I do not wish to be understood that I recede from any opinion I have expressed, as to there being a very important difference among the native troops of the armies of India as to value as fighting troops, and I entirely and emphatically disavow any presidential feeling in the matter. I believe I am quite incapable of any such feeling, and the opinion I have formed has been arrived at from having served with troops of all presidencies, and from information received from all quarters, and especially when I had good opportunities of knowing what was going on during the long period I was in charge of the Adjutant general's department in the field, during the Mutiny, and saw reports of all kinds, official and confidential, and conversed with numerous officers of all presidencies.

All I desire now to say is, that I disclaim presidential feeling; that I think that whatever opinion I have expressed in this matter I could prove judicially by witnesses, not one of whom should be capable of being discredited by reason of presidential feeling; and that to me it seems a very solemn duty, entertaining the opinion I do, to represent that, when we reduce men in a very small Native army, from which any day we may require a good deal, we should make that reduction from those troops which are least capable of acting with effect against a powerful enemy, and which, as it so happens, are expensive and difficult to move.

Having said thus much, my responsibility seems to be at an end, and I shall say no more on a subject on which it would have been more pleasant to be silent.

I trust that this minute may be forwarded, at an early date, to the Secretary of State.

Simla, May 20, 1871.

H. W. NORMAN.

Minute by H.E. General Lord Napier of Magdala, C. in C. in India, dated Simla, June 22, 1871.

It would have been most satisfactory to me could I have signed the despatch to the Secretary of State regarding army reductions without remark, but, agreeing so far as I do with the views of the Government of India of 1867-68, so forcibly expressed by the late C. in C. through the Adjutant general's and Quartermaster general's letters, in the minutes of the lamented Sir Henry Durand, and in the memorandum of the Military Secretary, and, differing so widely as I have done from the views of the Government of 1869, I could not avoid noting my dissent from those parts of the despatch in which the views of 1869 are reasserted.

I must add that, since the date of my minute of September last, on the reduction of the Native army, I have inspected most of the districts garrisoned by the troops under my command, and have realised, practically, the vast extent of country which they have to protect, and of the duties which they have to perform.

I have become more fully acquainted with the resources of the Independent States than I was before, and I have had before me the reports of the rapid approach of the Russian outposts to the frontiers of our ally, the Ameer of Cabul, and the effect it has on the minds of our native subjects; and I am, if possible, still more deeply impressed than before with the danger of weakening our disciplined forces, and of keeping up in the minds of our native soldiers the anxiety and distrust which, I have reason to believe, exist with regard to their future.

My acquaintance with the Eastern Frontier has convinced me that reduction in that quarter would be very inexpedient.

The arguments, in short, presented in the extracts from the correspondence and minutes which I have annexed for convenience of reference, especially the concluding parts of the minute of Sir Henry Durand, of April 5, 1867, and the twenty-ninth and thirtieth paragraphs of the memorandum of the Military Secretary of March 18, 1868, appear to me to have very much greater force now than when they were written, since which serious reductions of British troops have taken place.

It is to be remembered that in case of any urgent demand for increase of our Native armies, we have no longer the veterans of the Sikh army, nor the numerous classes of men bred up in arms, whom we were able to rally round our standards previous to and during the Mutiny; more than twenty years of comparative peace have greatly exhausted these sources of supply.

For the border clans we may have a customer bidding against us who can offer greater advantages than we can. Our recruits will have, for the most part, to come from the plough and the police, and will take time to become soldiers.

I can only regret that my proceedings, in replying to the arguments of General Norman, should have given my honourable colleague reason to think himself placed at a disadvantage, or have prevented him from making such correction of his note as was, I believe, permissible on its being converted into a minute.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

On Tuesday last Mr. T. L. Seccombe's examination was resumed, and the inquiry, as it did last year, dwelt a long time on questions regarding the healthy condition or otherwise of the Indian Government Loans. The subject of India Stocks and Loans involved inquiry into the general state of the Indian Exchequer, and the cost of public works in later years. Accounts showing the charges on public works, ordinary and reproductive, had been prepared in India. These accounts would be produced before the committee.

Mr W. T. Thornton, Secretary Public Works Department, and Mr Juland Danvers, the Secretary of the Railway Department, were next examined together on charges arising from Indian railways and other guaranteed companies. The charges were on account of guaranteed interest on the capital of railways :—Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway Company, £215,882. 4s. 9d.; Eastern Bengal, £16,243. 4s.; East Indian, £2,446,156. 3s. 3d.; G.I. Peninsula, £920,106; G.S. of India, £222,593 11s. 10d.; Madras, £258,321. 17s. 11d.; Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi, £591,177 11s. 3d.; Oude and Rohilkund, £542,126. 5s. 2d.; Carnatic, £10,197. 1s. 6d.; Madras Irrigation and Canal Company, £85,000; total charges incurred for railways, £5,343,804. 5s. 8d. The witnesses explained the system of guaranteeing railway interests. The India Office guaranteed on receiving the amount of the net receipts of the railway. In case the cost of working a railway exceeded its receipts, the company, and not the Government, would have to make up the deficit.

As the evidence continued on railways, it was explanatory of similar evidence given last year. It appeared, however that while Mr. Thornton held opinions opposed to the principle of guaranteeing the interests, Mr. Danvers did not participate in his coadjutors' views; but Mr. Danvers considered that the Government had now no occasion to guarantee, and that future railway constructions might be on a more open principle. On further evidence being taken on the solvency of certain companies, it was repeated that there had been one or two non-paying lines—instance the Mutlah line—a short railway running between Calcutta and the suburb of Canning-town, to which the Government had been indulgent in their financial difficulties—(a laugh). Only one trunk line of railway was now entirely completed; this was the East India Railway recently completed to Delhi. Mr. Thornton stated that the lines must all be completed before they would become quite independent. A plan of Lord Halifax's for subsidising Indian railways was discussed.

EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION.

On Tuesday, the 12th March, a meeting of this Association was held at the rooms of the Society of Arts, 18, John-street, Adelphi, when Mr. I. T. Prichard read a paper on "The Representation of India in Parliament." Mr. John Dickinson, formerly chairman of the Indian Reform Association, was in the chair, and, prior to opening the proceedings, paid an affectionate and eloquent tribute to the memory of the late Dr. Goldstücker, one of the members of council of the East India Association, who had been buried that afternoon.

Mr. Prichard premised his paper by some very appropriate remarks on the lamentable fate that had befallen the late Governor-General of India, and the detailed graphic reports that had come to hand that day. Mr. Prichard began his lecture by alluding to a paper of Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee on "Representative and Responsible Government for India," reported in the East India Association's Journal for 1867, but with which the present lecture had nothing but the name in common. Mr. Prichard treated his subject under three heads. The right of India to representation in Parliament was first advocated; secondly, the way in which it was proposed such representation should take place; thirdly, the lecturer recommended that India should be represented in the English Parliament by a deputation of at least five members elected in India to represent her in the Imperial Parliament. The plan to be carried out properly would necessitate the addition of five new seats in the House of Commons. One of the arguments used in behalf of Parliamentary representation for India upon the above principle was that as Great Britain had granted a large share in her legislation to Ireland and Scotland, viz, forty seats given to Scotland and one hundred to Ireland, that was a precedent for granting a few seats to the Dependency of India. As it was, India was only indirectly and most inadequately represented in Parliament by the two or three members who chose to take an interest in Indian politics. Mr. Prichard proceeded to say that he deemed the present merely municipal and local legislative institutions of India utterly inadequate to the wants and requirements of the people of that vast and immensely populated country. What was actually wanted had often been set forth and expressed by the voice of public opinion. The popular sentiment and feeling appealed for a share in home legislation. He (Mr. Prichard) advocated direct representation in Parliament in opposition to those who favour a local parliament in India, as by the latter course the tendency would be towards separation; whilst by his (Mr. Prichard's) plan it would be towards the unification and the permanency of the British supremacy in India.

In the discussion which followed Mr. E. B. Eastwick, C.B., M.P. (the chairman of the Council of the East India Association), S. J.

Dickinson, M.P. for Stroud, and other gentlemen spoke; but rather against Mr. Prichard's leading proposal of direct Parliamentary representation for India. The speakers appeared to be for limiting rather than extending the Parliamentary sphere of labour, which already exceeded its working capacity.

The meeting was adjourned to the 9th of April next, to allow of the lecture and discussion being printed and circulated, and to allow members of the association expressing their views and opinions further upon so vital a question.

LORD NORTHBROOK.

The Marquis of Westminster, in proposing the health of the new Viceroy, at the banquet at the Westminster Palace Hotel on Wednesday, dwelt upon the many good qualities which had made the early friends of Lord Northbrook feel assured that he would some day arrive at great distinction. The Duke of Cambridge also made some very flattering remarks, expressive of his high esteem for Lord Northbrook, and his confidence that he would so discharge the duties of his high position as to reflect honour upon his country and himself.

Lord Northbrook, who was evidently affected by the genuine cordiality of his reception, spoke gratefully of the kind feeling which had been evinced by so large a gathering, and one which represented all shades of politics. He complimented the Duke of Cambridge on the very able manner in which his Royal Highness had transacted business with the War-office during the time that he (Lord Northbrook) was Under-Secretary. He added that such a great meeting as that assembled would give him courage to do his duty, feeling, as he should, that he had so many friends at home who would charitably interpret his acts. Lord Northbrook did not avail himself of the opportunity to make any declaration respecting his Indian policy. In addition to the names of guests already published, there were also present the Hon. J. G. Dodson, M.P., Colonel Napier Sturt, M.P., and the Hon. Frank Baring.

A deputation from the Manchester Chamber of Commerce had an interview with Lord Northbrook on Tuesday, at the War-office. Sir T. Bazley, M.P., Mr. T. B. Potter, M.P., Mr. Mundella, M.P., Mr. Dalglish, M.P., and other members of Parliament were present. Speeches were made by Sir T. Bazley, who explained that the deputation, notwithstanding its Lancashire character, represented the commercial interests of the whole country, and who urged that the railway and canal communications in India should be extended; by Mr. Hugh Mason, President of the Chamber, who presented a memorial congratulating the Viceroy upon his appointment, urging the development of the canals, roads, and rivers, and asking for a survey of the route to Western China, which had been already begun; by Mr. Pender, M.P., who asked that the submarine telegraph companies might have fair play; and by Mr. J. B. Smith, M.P., who hoped his lordship would encourage experiments that tended to improve the cultivation of cotton.

Lord Northbrook, in reply, said: Nothing could be more flattering to me personally than the memorial which has been presented, and the observations offered by the various speakers who have supported its claims. I can only say I feel most sincerely the great responsibilities of the office I have been called upon to undertake, and that it can only be by the kind support of those who believe I shall act according to the best of my ability that I can expect in any way to fulfil the expectations which have been so kindly expressed. It is quite clear not only from the contents of the memorial, but from your remarks upon it, that the views upon Indian questions which the great cotton manufacturing county of England hold are by no means selfish in their nature. In fact, your propositions are intended to produce benefit, both moral and material, to India equally as to this country. There is not a word of yours which can draw forth a remark in the nature of criticising the Manchester views as selfish. You lay down broad principles of Indian administration, and it is quite clear that any course which, with justice to the people of India, encourages a very profitable trade between them and this country, can be no other than a beneficial course. The gentlemen present know so much about India that it would be impertinent in me to make any observations as to details. In fact, I may say at once that I have not yet had time to make myself acquainted with the present condition of the cotton trade between India and England, and I know there is much that is new. Changes are made very rapidly in India, and I am quite convinced that the little knowledge I possess of India, from my connection with the India-office some years ago, will require to be modified very much by what has taken place since that time. I am sure that the gentlemen connected with the Manchester trade are quite aware that India is a country where all the feelings of the natives must be most carefully considered. None of you would advise any course which would be inconsistent with the true interests, and even to some extent with the prejudices, of that people. I am very glad to hear that the quality of the cotton imported from India has improved of late years. That is a point to which great attention has been paid, not only in Manchester, but by the Government both here and in India, and it always appeared to me to be a vital point of the whole question of cotton exportation from India. It is very difficult to effect improvement, and it is very cheering that some, however trifling it may be, has taken place. I was speaking a day or two ago to Dr. Forbes Watson, who has paid great attention to the subject, and he gave me a very favourable view of the progress that has been made in the quality of the cotton grown in India, and the mode of its preparation for the home market. If any great improvement should be effected in this respect, it would be of immense value both to the people and Government, because a great increase in the production of cotton per acre would be at once taken up by the cultivators of India, who are a race by no means unable to appreciate the value of that sort of improvement. It would be an immense commercial advantage to both countries. As regards these various questions, I must ask you to be allowed simply to say they shall receive my most careful consideration, and that it will always be most agreeable to me to receive any suggestions or any expressions of opinion which those who are really conversant with the subject can give; more especially any suggestions relative to the information to be given to the native cultivator of cotton, as to the best manner in which cotton can be grown and prepared for the English market. I certainly hope that a successful, although friendly, competition may be established between the East and West with regard to the supply of cotton to England. I can give no opinion upon the question of a survey of the route to China, but when it comes before me I will recall the interest you express. I am afraid I must say very much the same of the telegraphs. That is a very complicated subject, and I understand a convention at Rome has been promoted on the subject. Of course, efficient telegraphic communication is now almost essential to the Government of India. I shall take care to look into the various telegraph lines with a desire to do what is right between them. All that has been said of the lamented nobleman, my predecessor, who lost his life while in the service of her Majesty, is true. Lord Mayo paid the greatest attention to every branch of his administration, and had what I have not—a personal knowledge of agricultural questions. In this I can only hope to follow in his steps, and I again repeat that your kind support, and the expression of your confidence, many of you having known me in the House of Commons, will be a great support to me, and it will be my endeavour, as far as I can, to justify your confidence. (Cheers.)

Miscellaneous.

APPOINTMENTS—INDIA OFFICE, (MARCH 14).—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Lord Northbrook to be Governor-General of India; Lord Hobart to be Governor of the Presidency of Fort St. George, at Madras; and Mr. Arthur Hobhouse, Q.C., to be an Ordinary member of the Council of the Governor-General of India.

RATES OF EXCHANGE.—An intimation has been issued from the India-office that the rate of exchange for the adjustment of officers' Indian pay and allowances, and of retrenchments, family remittances, and messing-money claims (which is fixed annually in communication with the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury), will be as follows for the official year, commencing the 1st of April, 1872, and ending the 31st March, 1873:—For Indian pay and allowances when issued together, one shilling and elevenpence halfpenny the rupee; for family remittances, retrenchments, and deductions, on account of messing-money, one shilling and elevenpence halfpenny the rupee. The adjustment of British pay without Indian allowances will be made as heretofore, at the fixed rate of two shillings and one halfpenny the rupee.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, March 11.—THE COST OF RETURNS.—Mr. BAXTER stated, in reply to Mr. RYLANDS, that the cost of printing the volumes of the East India Forests Conservancy Return of 1871, and the cost of the plans and paper, was £2,165. 2s. 6d. The volumes were prepared under the direction of the Secretary of State for India, and there were three officers employed on it at the salaries of £1,000, £580, and £180 respectively; but he was informed that the preparation of the returns caused no extra expense beyond the employment of an additional clerk at a cost of £25. Eight volumes had been sold, for which £13. 6s. had been received. The Treasury had given directions to the Stationery-office to put on all returns the cost of the paper, of the preparation, and of the printing; and it was hoped by-and-by that that system would be extended to all returns ordered by Parliament to be printed.

ARMY ESTIMATES.—When the House went into Committee of Supply the discussion of Mr. Holmes's proposal to reduce the army by 20,000 men was resumed.—Lord ELCHO led off with an account of the "ghastly" appearance which the militia presented in the course of the autumn manoeuvres, their feeble frames, and ill-made and over-worn uniforms; and then, passing to the Volunteers, complained that the Artillery branch of the service had not been properly encouraged, and accused the Government of having yielded to the blatant nonsense of a man who had made himself an ugly customer.—Lord BURY so far differed from his noble friend as to represent his speech as having the character of a party attack; while Mr. JACOB BRIGHT described this as a spendthrift Government, and expressed his hope that if the Conservatives should come into office they would prove more economical.—During the dinner hour the debate was conducted by Colonel ARBUTHNOT, who looked upon the matter from the view of an artilleryman—Mr. EASTWICK—Mr. O'REILLY, who carefully distinguished between "disaffection" and "discontent" in Ireland—Mr. SCOURFIELD, who, as usual, had a story to tell, and Mr. PEASE.—Sir J. PAKINGTON generally approved of the Ministerial proposals, especially that part of them which referred to the localisation of regiments.—Mr. V. HARCOURT made a severe attack upon our treaties of guarantee, and, relying upon our naval force, ridiculed the idea of our being exposed to invasion. His speech lasted nearly an hour; and there was a general laugh when Colonel L. LINDSAY said that all the matter that it contained might be put upon a sheet of note paper.—It was with far more than usual animation that Mr. CARDWELL entered into the defence of the abolition of purchase in the Army, and the arrangements now proposed to be carried out.—An accusation suggested by Sir J. PAKINGTON, that he had introduced the system of confidential reports, the right hon. gentleman rebutted by tossing over the table a form of report which was in use when the member for Droitwich was himself Secretary for War, but Sir John did not admit that this paper exactly answered to the character ascribed to it. The SECRETARY for WAR denounced in, for him, extraordinarily strong language, the suggestion of compulsory service in the Army as a thing that the House would never enact, and which could hardly be carried if it was imposed upon the people by Act of Parliament.—After Mr. HENLEY had denounced the impropriety of maintaining a peace establishment at an expenditure of nearly fifteen millions a year, the committee went to a division, and after several gentleman who had got into the wrong lobby had been directed to the right one, the majority for the Government was announced as 171—234 to 63. Then the committee was asked to vote upon Mr. Muntz's proposal to reduce the number of infantry of the line by 10,000 men. This time no mistakes were made, but the amendment was rejected by a majority of 149—216 to 67.—Mr. LEA challenged the decision of the committee upon the question whether a charge of £15,000 for army agents be retained in the estimates, and when he had been defeated by 87 to 43 the vote was agreed to.—Progress was reported, and soon after the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, March 12.—THE INDIAN ACCOUNTS.—Major ARBUTHNOT asked the Under-Secretary for India to state the reason of the delay in appointing a successor to Sir George Jameson, late auditor of Indian accounts, who died on the 24th of October, 1871; and whether it was intended to fill up the post, and, if so, when.—Mr. GRANT DUFF: The delay has arisen from some doubts as to the best method of giving effect to the provisions of the statute under which the auditor is appointed. These are now at an end, and I hope that the vacancy will be filled up in the next few days.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, March 15.—ROYAL ENGINEERS AND ROYAL ARTILLERY.—In answer to Captain BEAUMONT, Mr. CARDWELL said,—It is intended to make all the first captains of the Royal Artillery majors, and to revise the establishment of the Royal Engineers, so as to place them upon as good a footing in respect of promotion as the Royal Artillery. I do not agree with the argument suggested in the question, for by the proposed arrangements promotion in both corps will be brought up to about the standard periods.—Lord EUSTACE CECIL asked the Secretary of State for War whether there was any truth in the report which had appeared in the newspapers that "no steps have yet been taken to form a new advanced class of officers of the Royal Artillery at Woolwich, although the class now under instruction had nearly completed its studies."—Mr. CARDWELL: It has been represented to me by the Deputy Adjutant-General of the Royal Artillery that the advanced class for officers had so few candidates that it was difficult to justify its maintenance, the expense being out of proportion to the utility. I have, therefore, appointed a committee, of which the Director-General of Military Education is the head, to consider what steps it is desirable to take on the subject.

RAILWAY FROM KHUNDWA TO INDORE.—Mr. SCLATER-BOOTH asked the Under-Secretary for India whether it was true that contracts had been entered into by the Government of India for the construction of a railway on the narrow gauge (3 ft. 3½ in.) from Khundwa to Indore; whether such railway would not ultimately form part of a through communication between the East Indian and Great Indian Peninsula systems; and whether the consequence would not be to establish a double break of gauge (viz., at Khundwa and Agra) on the future direct route from Bombay to the North-West Provinces.—Mr. GRANT-DUFF: In reply to my hon. friend I have to say—first, that such a line has been contracted for; secondly, that it may be extended so as to form a link between the East Indian and the Great Indian Peninsula systems; thirdly, that in that event there will be a break of gauge both at Khundwa and at Agra, but these breaks of gauge will be on a line, not on the line from Bombay to the North-West Provinces. Passengers going direct from Bombay to the North-West Provinces will, of course, prefer the broad gauge line which runs straight to Allahabad, the capital of those Provinces, instead of the one about which my hon. friend asks, which is laid out for local purposes.

PEPSINE.—The popular and professional medicine for Indigestion is MORSON'S PEPSINE, the active principle of the gastric juice. In Powder, Lozenges, Globules, and as Wine.

CHLORODYNE has now obtained such universal celebrity it can scarcely be considered a speciality, its composition being known to most European practitioners. The combination of Chloroform quickly relieves the pain and spasms of Cholera, Diarrhoea, Dysentery, and in fact all acute and nervous pains, and chronic Coughs; frequently small doses will produce this beneficial result. Many of the Chlorodynes of commerce are not of uniform strength; this has induced Morson and Son to compound their preparation. Sold in 1-oz., 1, and 2-oz. bottles.

agent extant is MORSON'S.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

UNWHOLEsome CHANGES.—The changeable weather is causing much sickness, and exerting the most deleterious influence in deranging the secretions of the body.
Alternating chills and heats so derange the capillary circulation, that the liver, stomach, or lungs must become disordered. Holloway's Ointment, well rubbed over these organs twice a day, proves the quickest, safest, and best corrective. It penetrates the skin, enters the deeper structures, purifies their blood, cleanses their substance, equalises their circulation, and renders their secretions abundant, without annoying, irritating, or exhausting the weakest or most delicate invalid.
Colds, coughs, influenzae, and other chest complaints, originating in damp variable seasons, are checked in their debilitating careers, and cured by Holloway's remedies.

Summary and Review.

Now that the Indian mails appear to arrive regularly on Monday mornings, the publication of Allen's Mail will in future take place, as in fact it has generally done for some time past, on Monday afternoon instead of Tuesday.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, March 4; Agra and Madras, March 2; Calcutta, March 1.

LORD NAPIER of Merchistoun, the acting Viceroy, arrived at Calcutta on the evening of the 23rd February. After going through the usual form of taking his seat in Council, his Lordship in few but fit words engaged the sympathy of his new colleagues in discharging "the saddest duty of his life;" touched on the merits of the statesman and friend whose counsels he would strive to follow, and by whose example he hoped to benefit; and besought from his hearers the same cordial but independent support which they had always given his predecessor.

ONE of the acting Viceroy's first public movements was to preside at a meeting of the Legislative Council on Wednesday, February 28, when a number of Bills, including one for defining the jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court over Sindh, were introduced respectively by Sir R. Temple, Messrs. Stephen, Chapman, and Stewart. For want of time the Report of one Committee on the Bill declaring what laws are in force in the Punjab, and that of another on the Bill to regulate the Courts in British Burmah, had to lie over until the next meeting.

THANKSGIVING Day appears to have been loyally observed in all the great Anglo-Indian cities. Owing to the gloom caused by the death of Lord Mayo, the ceremonies were everywhere marked by a staid solemnity best suited to the occasion. Prayers and thanksgivings were offered with visible earnestness in all the churches, mosques, and temples, by numerous worshippers of every creed. In Calcutta the Viceroy, in Bombay and Madras their respective Governors, went in state to the Cathedral. No class of natives appears to have entered into the day's solemnities with greater enthusiasm than the Mohammedans. At Baroda the Gaikwar held a Durbar in honour of the day, and begged the assembled chiefs and ministers to proclaim far and wide the good tidings of the Prince's recovery. His Highness then launched into courtly praises of the Prince's excellent mother, and the training which both she and her husband must have given to their like-minded son. After dwelling on the happiness secured to India by the British rule, he ended by announcing his intention to expend a lakh of rupees on some work of public usefulness, to be chosen by the Governor of Bombay and named after his Royal Highness. Another loyal gentleman, Mr. A. D. Sassoon, of Bombay, a member of the Legislative Council, has presented the Governor with £5,000, to be laid out in the Prince's honour on the buildings of the new Elphinstone High School, to which he had already contributed £10,000.

LORD MAYO's death still formed the central topic of general discussion in India. What were the murderer's real motives and what sort of punishment would be most deterrent of similar offenders, are questions which still exercise the public mind. According to one journal, the Bengal Times, Sher Ali's knife forestalled a yet more fearful tragedy of which Mount Harriet was destined to be the scene. We are gravely assured that a plot was laid by some of the Port Blair convicts to rise upon the guards and slaughter every Christian who was to have gone up Mount Harriet on the day after that of Lord Mayo's death. As for simply hanging Sher Ali, there seems to be a general demur to such a punishment as useless to prevent the recurrence of such a crime. Mere hanging, it is argued, will deter no zealous Mussulman from deeds of sudden violence. One writer accordingly would hang the murderer in a pigskin; another would doom him to a life of hard labour, varied by periodical floggings; while a third proposes to shave his head clean before hanging him. If a single scalp-lock is left, he can still be pulled up, it seems, to heaven; but shave his head and chin, and you cut him off irretrievably from eternal bliss. After shaving him, you can add fresh tortures to his lot by "anointing him with pig's-lard" and hanging him by the hands of a common sweeper. Still more humanely ingenious are the suggestions of a writer in the Delhi Gazette, who would brand the murderer on the forehead with a large M, lop off both his arms at the elbow, send him round the Cape to England in an iron cage, have him whipped once a month for twenty years, and exhibit him daily among the wild beasts in the Tower of London. Happily for the wretched cause of all these christian-like proposals, he has already gone where nothing earthly can hurt him any more.

LORD NAPIER of Merchistoun has ordered a careful inquiry into all the circumstances of the late tragedy at Port Blair. We need hardly say that nothing short of the strongest evidence will overcome the tendency of most people in India, to look on Sher Ali as the tool of a Wahabi plot. The story of two men setting upon Lord Mayo is explained by the evidence of Lieutenant Hawkins of the Glasgow, who, at the moment of Sher Ali's capture, saw some one, dressed in white, rush past, "as if endeavouring to escape off the pier." In his opinion there were "two assailants, the man who rushed past him landwards being the second." No other witness, however, corroborates this part of the Lieutenant's statement.

THE HON. J. D. MAYNE, who has filled the post of Acting Advocate General since the retirement of Mr. Norton, has resigned his appointment. He has also resigned his Assistant Secretaryship to the Legislative Council. The Government of Madras will thus lose the services of one of the most able of the practising barristers at the Madras bar. It is understood that a slight misunderstanding between the present Government and Mr. Mayne is the cause of the latter's retirement from the Advocate Generalship.

THE retributive movement planned by Brigadier Keyes against the refractory border-tribes in the Daur Valley seems to have been carried out with great spirit. The tribes in question having refused to pay a fine for abetting the revolt of the Mohammed Khels, a force of 1,800 rifles, 350 sabres, and two 24-pounder howitzers, was despatched from Edwardesabad, alias Bunnoo, on the 6th February, to bring the culprits to their senses. Leaving 270 men to guard their camp, the rest of the force advanced the next morning from the Tochi Pass by the rough and steep road which leads over the Shiaki Kotal into the Daur Valley. Over the steepest parts of the road the guns had to be dragged up by the soldiers themselves. On reaching the head of the valley, the Dauries were found drawn up in front of their chief village, Haidarkhel. Major Munro, the Commissioner, began to treat with some of their leading men, but meanwhile the troops continued their advance, ready either for peace or war. As they neared the village, the enemy opened fire on them, which they returned with interest. Carrying the village with a sudden rush, the Sikhs drove the enemy out at the other end under the sabres of the 2nd Punjab Cavalry, who had hastened round to cut off their retreat. After the village had been set on fire, the neighbouring villages of Haisi and Sokhel at once sent messengers to beg for peace on the Commissioner's own terms. Their prayer being granted, and security taken for the fines imposed on them, the troops returned homewards, reaching camp at 10 P.M., after a long day's work, with a loss of seven men wounded. Of the enemy forty-three were killed; but the number of wounded is unknown.

ON the 13th March General Brownlow reported to Calcutta that the whole of the Southern Howlong tribes had submitted to his column, the task confided to which had thus been fully accomplished. Summing up the results of the campaign on his side, he says that two powerful hostile tribes have been completely subdued, and twenty resisting villages destroyed; fifteen chiefs have sealed their submission by formal pledges, and a great many captives have been released. So far all is satisfactory; but we must wait to see how long these gentry keep their word.

GENERAL NUTHALL'S Contingent of Manipoories, who were the first to exchange blows with the Loshais, seem, after a long spell of forced inaction, to have once more proved their prowess on the same foe. According to a Calcutta telegram of the 19th the General retired from his advanced post at Seeboo on the 6th. On the following day his troops intercepted a hundred Kamhows engaged in carrying off nearly a thousand captives from the neighbouring villages, to some securer retreat. A short fight ended in the capture of the Kamhow chief and fifty-six of his followers, and the rescue of all their prisoners. Fifty-two muskets formed part of the victors' trophies. This little triumph will have doubtless cheered the heart of the Manipore Rajah, who had long been chafing at the little share his own troops had been allowed to take in the movement against their hereditary foes.

Whatever doubts Englishmen may feel as to the need of the severities inflicted on the Kuka insurgents, the Sikh Chiefs of Sirhind appear thoroughly satisfied with Mr. Cowan's proceedings. In a letter to the Times, Mr. T. H. Thornton, Secretary to the Punjab Government, but now at home on leave, quotes the following passage from a letter written to him by the Maharajah of Patiala, whose father played a part so eminently loyal during the Indian Mutiny. The present Rajah is described as "a young man of enlightened views and generous disposition," who would be "the last person in the world" to advocate any needless destruction of human life:—

You will have heard of the sudden attack on Malod and Kotla by the fanatics of the Kuka creed, and the prompt measures taken, which extinguished the disturbance immediately. I am sure, had not the men been captured and dealt with at once as they have been, the consequences would have been disastrous.

It appears from a recent telegram that a fund has been started in Calcutta for a memorial in honour of the late Viceroy. A considerable sum has already been subscribed.

WE are glad to see that a pension of five hundred a-year has at length been granted by the India Office to the widow of the late Chief-Justice Norman, "in consideration of his having been murdered, and of his services of nine and a-half years on the Bench in India." The laying of an apparent stress on the fact of Mr. Norman's having been murdered might lead some people to think that the amount of pension in such cases depended on the manner of a man's death. We presume, however, that the pension granted to Mrs. Norman would have been just the same had her husband died prematurely of ill-health contracted in the regular discharge of his duties. It could not have been the manner of his death, but the extent of his previous services, coupled with the fact of their having been brought through no fault of his to a sudden and untimely close, which entitled his widow to the pension now bestowed upon her.

MR. GRANT DUFF's reply to a question put by Sir James Elphinstone, touching the claims of Indian officers to bonus compensation, was an admirable piece of official strategy. It was all very well of his questioner to try and drive him into a corner, by contrasting the justice withheld from the officers of the old Indian army with the liberal terms conceded to their comrades in the new Line Regiments under Clause IV. of the Army Act. But the Under-Secretary for India was equal to the occasion. The courage he displayed in denying the manifest analogy between the two cases would have been worthy of a much better cause. Her Majesty's Ministers, he said, could "see no reason why a settlement made by their predecessors so long ago" as August, 1866, "should be now disturbed because under different circumstances a different arrangement was made last year with the officers of a different army." Just so; for the speaker's purpose there was no need to enlarge on the difference between an army whose Parliamentary influence ensured it fair and generous treatment at the hands of the Executive, and an army whose remote connection with the body politic entitled it only to the stray crumbs of cold comfort that might fall from the table of a Secretary of State for a distant dependency. Nor was it to be expected that Mr. Grant Duff would refer to the amendments made, with Mr. Cardwell's consent, in that clause of the Army Bill which originally placed the new line regiments on exactly the same footing of sham compensation as their former comrades in the Indian Army. It may also in a certain sense be true that the claims of Indian officers were "disposed of" in the Despatch of August 1866; but the vote of the Commons in 1870 and the recorded opinions of Lord Napier and the Governments of Bombay and Madras suggest at any rate some very strong reasons for revising a settlement, which the aggrieved officers, as soon as they understood its true nature, condemned with one voice as settling nothing. They were willing at one time from utter weariness to accept full compensation for actual outlay, had such been offered them; but now that the officers of "a different army" are receiving an equivalent for their expected bonuses, they too are asking in common justice for an exactly similar boon, to which in law and equity they were entitled long before the passing of the Army Regulation Act. The whole cost of such a concession would hardly amount, we believe, to half a million, or about a fifth part of the surplus which Sir R. Temple will probably have to announce in his next budget statement.

SOME of our readers will be glad to hear that the two committees which have lately differed in their mode of agitating the Indian Bonus question, have at length agreed to work harmoniously for the common end. With a view to unite the largest number of voters on their side in Parliament, they have resolved to ask for Bonus compensation on the terms contained in Clause 4 of the Army Act, so far as these involve the principle of a fair equivalent for the customary sum which each officer would have received from his juniors had he retired before a certain date. That date they now propose to fix at 1861, when the last stage in the amalgamating process was attained by the formation of the Staff Corps. Few officers, we think, will object to an arrangement which sacrifices a little to gain much, and promises from its reasonable nature materially to strengthen their cause in both Houses.

One attempt to remedy the slow promotion which has long prevailed in the Indian Artillery has at length been made in the Horse-Guards Circular, which we have reprinted elsewhere. With the sanction of the Indian Office it has been resolved to offer additional pensions to thirty-six field-officers and twenty-eight captains and second-captains of the late Indian Artilleries; the officers being taken in fair proportions from each of the three Presidencies. These annuities, which are to be exclusive of the usual retiring-pensions, range, at an increase of ten pounds for each year of service, from £150 a-year for an officer of twenty years' service, to £350 for one who has served forty years. Thus an officer entitled to a retiring pension of £191 a-year will, if he is lucky, receive an aggregate pension of £341 a-year; while he who might demur to retiring on £365 a-year after twenty-eight years' service, may now hope to receive as much as £585 a-year. The pension of £600 a-year after thirty-five years' service would in like manner be increased to £900. In no case however will the aggregate retiring allowance exceed £1,000 a-year. It is also proposed to give special annuities to officers of fifteen years' service and upwards, who may not be entitled to any other pension, beginning with £150 for fifteen years, and £20 more for each succeeding year of service. Promotions will only be made to one in two of the vacancies that may thus be caused. Not a few officers of the old Indian Artillery will doubtless hasten to profit by these new offers. May we venture to hope that they foreshadow the offering of similar boons to the surplus officers in the Staff Corps, whose case, according to Mr. Grant Duff, is once more "under consideration?" It is something gained to know that a new scheme for inducing field officers of the Indian Army to retire has actually been laid before the Indian Council. In due time we may even expect to hear that a scheme of bonus-compensation has found its way to the same august presence. Will anything be done, by the way, for those officers of Artillery who have lately retired in despair of the more favourable terms now offered to their old comrades?

THE report to which we lately referred, that Dr. Goldstücker had left in his will directions for the destruction of his many valuable papers in manuscript, appears from the Academy to have been altogether a mistake. We may therefore hope that some good use will yet be made of the literary treasures he had thus been accumulating for so many years past. Many of these papers are necessarily incomplete, but Dr. Goldstücker's Sanskrit Grammar, a work whose high value may be guessed from his pre-eminence as a Sanskrit scholar, is said to be quite ready for going to the press. In that case let us hope that the India Office will itself undertake the publication of a volume which must throw a great deal of fresh light on the study of India's classical tongue. The task of completing his revised and enlarged edition of Wilson's Sanskrit Dictionary will be one of Herculean dimensions, for the first six parts, containing 480 pages, do not bring the work to the end of the first letter. Still it is one which somebody, we trust, will be found able and willing to undertake. Of another of the Professors' works, a photolithographic edition of the Mahābhāṣya, which he was engaged in editing for the Indian Government, three hundred pages remain unfinished. In his readings of doubtful passages in Sanskrit, Dr. Goldstücker was wont to follow the traditions of the Pandits, in preference to Dr. Max Muller's principle of interpreting them by the light of comparative philology.

LORD NORTHBROOK started for India on the 21st, via Marseilles, whence he was to embark in the Antelope for Alexandria.

LADY MAYO'S PENSION.

A GOOD deal of adverse criticism has been aimed at the India Office for what is said to be its niggardly treatment of Lord Mayo's widow and children, bereft of their natural protector under circumstances which would justify any amount of practical sympathy with the bereaved survivors. Mr. Gladstone, indeed, reminded his hearers that a pension of £1,000 a-year for Lady Mayo, accompanied with a grant of £20,000 down for the benefit of her children, was more than equal to the £2,000 a-year bestowed on Lady Elgin. It is also worth noting that one-half of Lady Elgin's pension was paid out of the Imperial revenues, whereas the whole amount awarded to Lady Mayo will be defrayed from the Indian Exchequer. So far therefore as the Indian Government is concerned, it can hardly be pleaded with any fairness that the debt which India owes to Lord Mayo has not been adequately repaid to his family. To judge however from the comments of the daily papers, a good many people remain dissatisfied. One journal points a contrast between the money lavished on balls and banquets at Westminster and the money begrudged to the widow of a munificent Viceroy, who died a violent death in the discharge of his public duty. Another argues that a people accustomed to see immense revenues squandered in "sloth, debauchery, and vice," by the princely pensioners of the Indian Government, would never begrudge a handsome pension to the relict of the most popular Governor whose loss they ever had to mourn. The case of a Viceroy who dies, like Lord Elgin, from "natural causes," is declared to be very different from that of one who dies by assassination "in the immediate discharge of a public duty." Where the difference lies we are quite unable to see, inasmuch as Lord Elgin also died in the discharge of his public duties. If Sir H. Durand had been murdered instead of accidentally breaking his neck, would the amount of his widow's pension have been proportionately higher? As for the pensions lavished on native princes, we had always looked on them as the price paid for sundry excellent bargains secured to ourselves. If Indian money has been sometimes squandered on improper objects, that is surely no reason for repeating the extravagance under more plausible pretences. Two wrongs will never make a right. Were Lord Mayo's services never so splendid, his widow would not have been entitled to more than she has got from India. The complainants in this case would have more reason on their side, if they appealed to Mr. Gladstone to supplement from the English Treasury the sums awarded out of Indian revenue by the head of the Indian Government.

REDUCTION OF THE NATIVE ARMIES.

THE correspondence interchanged last year between the India Office and the Indian Government on the question of reducing the native Indian Army, discloses a grave difference of opinion between the two parties touching the way in which reduction should be carried out. The Indian Government would bring the proposed retrenchments to bear chiefly against the Madras Army, which is held to be too large for local purposes, as compared with that of Bengal, and to be of all the three armies the one least fitted, either financially or professionally, for employment in future wars. Whatever it may once have been, the native army of Madras, according to General Norman and most of his colleagues, now lags far behind those of Bengal and Bombay in true fighting-power, while its greater costliness, owing to the care taken of the Sepoys' families by the Government, considerably outweighs its apparent merits. If any reduction therefore is needed in the native army, let it fall chiefly, they urge, on that part of it which can most easily and safely be cut down, with the largest consequent saving on each man reduced. The alternative plan of weakening Indian regiments, now only six hundred strong, by seventy men each, they regard as "absolutely fatal to efficiency." They hold themselves ready to carry out any scheme of reduction ordered by the Secretary of State, but take leave in the meantime to protest against his tenderness towards an army whose usefulness, even as a reserve, is not unreasonably called in question.

The Secretary of State on the other hand flatly refuses to let the Madras Army bear the brunt of the desired reductions. General Norman had significantly declared that if a regiment of Madras sepoy were to be pitted against one of Sikhs or Goorkhas, "the results would be disastrous." But the Duke of Argyll can see no reason for admitting any decline in the fighting qualities of the Madras troops since the day when Sir John Malcolm owned that he had "hardly a choice" between the troops of the three Presidencies; each army having different excellences, but all being equally effective. General Norman claims to have formed his own opinion from actual service with troops of all three Presidencies, and from minute information gathered in all quarters during his career as Adjutant-General. But a more modern authority than Sir J. Malcolm, even Lord Napier of Magdala, can find no warrant for the sweeping judgment pronounced by General Norman, and declares his firm belief that with like opportunities the men of Assaye and Seringapatam "will still be found represented" in the ranks of the Madras Army. He might have added that half a century ago and even later the Sikhs themselves were held in light esteem for soldiery by their neighbours. The secret of their subsequent renown was discipline, with the aid of which, as Lord Napier observes, "we have conquered successively the strongest races in India by means of weaker ones." It was not till the same officer had become personally acquainted with the Bombay Army, that he learned, as he frankly tells us, to feel ashamed of the local prejudices into which, like most of his Bengal comrades, he had once fallen. The argument from one Presidency does not, of course, infer the necessary groundlessness of similar prejudices with regard to another; but the Duke of Argyll has some reason for denying that "races cease to be available for effective military service, under European training and discipline, by ceasing to be habituated to predatory warfare among themselves." Even if the sepoy of the Southern Army were in some respects inferior to their comrades of Upper India, they are excellently fitted to keep the peace of their own provinces against all likely assailants.

With regard to the comparative costliness of the Madras regiments, his Grace appears to make light of it in comparison with the advantages of an organisation which tends to bind them closer, and so keep them more faithful to their present masters. "The family life led by the Madras sepoy, and the care taken of the families by the Government, had established ties between the Government and the sepoy which have not existed in the same strength in any other portion of the Native army of India." The Bengal sepoy, be it remembered, carries no incumbrances about with him in the shape of those "hosiages to fortune" which may often likewise serve as guarantees of good behaviour. For a reserve army such an arrangement seems the best that could be made. So long as the Madras troops are employed in keeping the peace of Southern India, it must be a good thing for all concerned that they should carry their homes about with them from one station to another. It is only when they are sent outside the Presidency that the inconvenience of the system happens for a time to outweigh its general advantages. But, as the normal condition of the Madras Army is that of service within its own frontiers, the advantages on the whole may be said to preponderate.

But the Madras Army is too large, says the Indian Government, for existing requirements. Be it so, admits his Grace. Still, as Sir W. Mansfield and others have pointed out, it is the only army of reserve in India; and to it, moreover, as the Duke of Argyll reminds us, is entrusted the duty of keeping guard over the large tract of country ruled by the Nizam. Lord Napier, Governor of Madras, admits that half a dozen of the Madras Regiments might perhaps be spared, so far as local wants are concerned. But instead of wiping them off the rolls, he pleads with much force the wisdom of employing them in stations outside the actual frontier, which are now garrisoned wholly or in part by troops from Bombay or Bengal. Why for instance should any station in the Central Province be still garrisoned from Bengal? It would surely be a fair division of forces, if Bombay and Madras were allowed to garrison the whole of the country lying to the south of the Vindhyan Range. Whether Madras should garrison the Central Provinces, or exchange stations with the Bombay troops now holding the Southern Maratha Country, would then be a question of mere detail, to be handled in accordance with the local and political relations of either presidency.

So easy a method of utilising the surplus regiments of an army, which at any rate held fast to its colours in the day of our sharpest trials in India, demands the closer consideration in view of the arguments used by Lord Napier of Magdala against reducing the Native Army of Bengal. His recent experience as Commander-in-Chief has impressed him more deeply than ever with "the danger of weakening our disciplined forces" and keeping up anxiety among the sepoy with regard to their future, by our habitual "meddling with the Native Army on every temporary financial pressure." Looking at the vast extent of country protected by the Bengal troops, at the duties entrusted to them, at the position of the independent States on our frontiers, of the great feudatories who pay us tribute, at the swift advance of Russian outposts to the borders of Afghanistan, and at the decaying supply of Sikh veterans and of men bred up in arms, his Lordship adheres more firmly than ever to his old views regarding the impolicy of further reductions in Bengal. Upper India to his thinking needs more soldiers instead of fewer, and in this view he is certainly strengthened by the evidence taken before a Parliamentary Committee some years ago. It was then shown that the native army in Bengal had quite as much work of all kinds as it could well perform, and since then its burdens have not been lightened by the reductions ordered in the European garrison. This being so, what is to prevent the armies of Bombay and Madras from relieving, so far as they safely can, their over-worked comrades in Bengal? The Madras troops, if they are fit for anything, are surely equal to the task of garrisoning Orissa, while those of Bombay might even be ordered as far east as Gwalior.

NATIVE PRINCES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—A great pressure upon my time has hitherto prevented me from replying to the letter of Mr. F. W. Chesson, which appeared in your impression of the 30th of January last.

My assertion that without an intimate knowledge of the natives of India no one is qualified to take part in Indian affairs, he endeavours to reduce to an absurdity by saying that according to my theory "the Duke of Argyll is wholly unfit to be Secretary of State for India." I should be content to accept this conclusion if his Grace or any other high official attempted to administer Indian affairs by himself without any knowledge or experience of the country; but I would beg leave to remind Mr. Chesson that the Secretary of State for India is associated with many gentlemen of life-long experience, and as the Board at which his Grace the Duke of Argyll presides is a body of exceptionally experienced Anglo-Indians, Mr. Chesson himself can hardly fail to see that his objection is an absolute fallacy. The same remarks apply to members of Parliament who would have, according to Mr. Chesson's interpretation of my dictum, no right to take part in the discussion of Indian affairs.

As a matter of fact, when an Indian question is brought before the House, only those statesmen who are themselves conversant with Indian topics, or are assisted by the counsels of those who have resided in the country, venture to speak upon the subject. There are always persons ready enough to act as mouthpieces and pamphleteers to rich Nawabs with chimerical grievances, but they are happily rare in the British Parliament. I cannot help thinking that the sooner the occupation of such gentry is gone, and the sooner the natives of India are made to understand that their appeal lies only to the Governor-General, and the Secretary of State for India, the better it will be for them, and the more creditable for us. With regard to Mr. Chesson's denunciation of Lord Dalhousie's policy in Oudh I will only remark that that policy was not the arbitrary conception of Lord Dalhousie himself, but was in reality the carrying into effect of a policy which had been earnestly recommended to the Home Authorities by every Governor-General of India since the year 1775.

Did I not fear that I should take up too much of your valuable space I would quote the despatches of the successive Viceroys relative to this matter; however, I recommend Mr. Chesson to peruse the Oudh papers between the time of Asoph ood Dowlah and Wajid ali Shah.

In 1856 a sanguinary feud broke out in Faizabad, Oudh, between Hindoos and Mussulmans about Hano Man Garhi, when, but for the interposition of the British authority, the king would have been murdered and the whole dynasty annihilated.

The Marquis of Dalhousie then urged upon the Home Government the necessity either of withdrawing all support from the native government of Oudh, or of adopting some measures by which the dignity of the puppet King might be upheld and the lives and property of his subjects preserved.

The result of the first policy would have been to foster anarchy and encourage bloodshed. A month after the withdrawal of the British troops the Province of Oudh would have been desolate and its population decimated. We had a just right by treaty to interfere. The matter was seriously and deliberately considered by the Cabinet Council at home, and finally Lord Dalhousie was ordered to annex.

I can hardly glance with patience at the history of Oudh while under the rule of an effeminate tyrant supported by the powerful protection of the British arms; the disgusting profligacy of the Court, and the extortion and oppression to which the people were exposed, reflect disgrace on us as a Christian nation; for by maintaining a mad debauchee upon the throne, we made ourselves parties to the miseries that were inflicted on a harmless race.

In my former letter I glanced at the career of the wretched prince, and will not offend your readers by a recurrence to so melancholy a topic. Why should we or our Indian fellow-subjects be any longer pestered with this hollow grievance about the annexation of Oudh? Except curtailing the facilities of a madman for committing folly no hardship has been dealt. The people of Oudh are not dissatisfied with their change of rulers, and the change is one which the Oudh Princes themselves had contemplated long before. The then Governor General in a despatch to the Secret Committee, dated 28th Nov., 1799, says:—

His Excellency Saadat Ali appears to have adopted the resolution of abdicating the Government upon the maturest deliberation.

It was only the advice of interested councillors who persuaded Saadat Ali to abandon his design and retain charge of the Government.

Mr. Chesson lays great stress upon the fact that the Princes of Oudh have never been wanting in good faith to the British Government. I again call attention to the fact that the Princes of Oudh were wholly dependent upon the British Government, and without the British Government they could not have continued in power for a single day; under such circumstances their loyalty may reasonably have been expected to continue unimpaired.

Mr. Chesson quotes the report of Sir Frederick Halliday upon the Corrupt Police of Bengal. Well, what does this prove? It proves that when mismanagement is discovered in a province administered by British Government, the very officers themselves come boldly forward and expose it. Far different was it in Oudh; the dirt that had for centuries accumulated in those Augean stables was carefully kept out of sight.

The late General Sir William H. Sleeman, in his Diary, says:—"The Talookdars keep the country in a perpetual state of disturbance, and render life, property, and industry everywhere insecure. No road, town, village, or hamlet is secure from their merciless attacks; robbery and murder become their diversion, their sport, and they think no more of taking the lives of men, women, and children, than those of deer and wild dogs. They not only rob and murder, but seize, confine, and torture all whom they suppose to have money or credit, till they ransom themselves with all they have, or can beg, or borrow." The Oudh Talookdars, in an address to the Governor-general on the 17th of April, 1861, and signed by thousands of their number, express themselves as follows:—"The land of Oudh was once like a fresh, fair garden, but, being overrun by ravening beasts, it had become a desert waste. Now, thanks to your Excellency's kind exertions, it has become a Paradise once more." From 1711 to 1859, Oudh was indeed a desolate waste; whole towns and villages lay in ruins, deserted by their inhabitants, and if, at rare intervals, a populous village could be found, its inhabitants were armed to the teeth, in daily fear of depredators. Travellers who ventured on the highway were robbed and murdered, marriage parties were attacked and the bride borne off to servitude or worse—in short, Oudh under its native rulers suffered all the evils which a selfish and careless government must inevitably impose upon its subjects. Such, however, is the Government which Mr. Chesson has come forward to defend. The fact is, we annexed Oudh not because we wanted territory, but because we desired peace, because we preferred orderly citizens to disorderly neighbours. We annexed that we might free a peaceful and industrious people from the yoke of a licentious tyrant, who was ruining their estate and corrupting their morals.

The State of Oudh under Wajid Ali Shah was very similar to that of Khorassan after the invasion of the Ghuz Tribe in the reign of Sultan Sanjer, as described by the Poet Anvari:—

All trace of good from Iran they destroy,
Good men to bad men are compelled to stoop,
The noble are subjected to the vile,
The priest is pressed to fill the drunkard's stoup,
No man therein is ever seen to smile,
Save at the blow that brings release—and doom!
No maiden lives that they do not defile,
Except the maid within her mother's womb.
In every town the mosque and house of prayer—
To give their horses and their cattle room—
Is left all roofless, desolate, and bare.
"Prayer for our Tartar rulers" there is none
In all Khorassan it is true—for where Where are the preachers and the pulpits gone?
Their mothers, when by the assassin's steel
They see their children murdered one by one,
Dare not give utterance to the grief they feel.
The freeman kidnapped by the Tartar chief,
And sold again, rejoices in the deal,
For change—a change of masters—brings relief.

I will, however, do his ex-Majesty the justice to say that, had it not been for his greedy and interested advisers he would long before the annexation have exchanged his unpopular position for the comfortable obscurity to which he has been relegated. I say this on the authority of the ex-King himself, who, in a poetical work published by him in Calcutta in 1865, and entitled "Hazan Akhtar," says:—

Every moment my conscience suggested to me that what was to be has come to pass, why then grieve?

Affix the seal to the deed of consent at once—the kingdom has gone, then let it go.

The entire household, however, combined to prevent me from doing this; they pressed me, frightened me, worried me out of it.

When the Secretary of State for India, in his despatch dated 13th October, 1855 (paragraph 32), decided "that the titular sovereignty and the lac of rupees per mensem pension should cease for ever with the life of the present nominal king," the king, on being informed of this decision, wrote a letter in Persian, dated 5th of October, 1859, in which he cheerfully accepted the conditions. Had Wajid Ali Shah remained upon the throne he would in all probability have been poisoned long ago, as his predecessors were; personally then the ex-King of Oudh has little cause to quarrel with the English Government.

In my letter I advocated the claims of the Nawab of Tonk, not to the restitution of his kingdom, but to the justice of receiving a fair trial. I still think that it is a pity this privilege was not accorded him, as another distinguished grievance-monger, under much more auspicious circumstances, was not refused it. Two short extracts from Government despatches will tell the tale to which I allude.

Mr. C. Beadon, on Nov. 15, 1853, wrote as follows to the Governor-General's Agent at Moorshedabad:—

The Nawab Nazim, in whose camp and under whose very eyes this monstrous outrage upon humanity has been perpetrated, should be required to give an explanation of his conduct in the matter.

The Nawab Nazim of Bengal having permitted a cruel murder, by the infliction of bastinado, to be committed within his jurisdiction, and almost at the door of his tent.

The cases of the two Nawabs were thus far alike, and I cannot quite understand why any difference should have been made between them, especially as the Nawab of Tonk, during the whole of his administration at Benares, does not appear to have had the slightest charge of misrule brought against him. With regard to the case of the Nawab Nazim of Bengal, I need say little, as it has already been fully discussed and happily disposed of by Parliament. Those, however, who are interested in the case may read Orme's "History of India," Vol. 2, p. 183, and Stuart's "History of Bengal," p. 532; and if, after doing so, they can still believe in the Royal descent or family claims of the present Nawab Nazim, they must have a more than usual amount of credulity in their composition. It is all very well to talk in Quixotic terms of the inviolability of treaties between our Government and the independent native Princes of a few generations ago; but no principle of international law can call upon us to adhere strictly to the letter of those treaties when those Princes' descendants have, by their own folly, supineness, debauchery and tyranny, wilfully forfeited the independence which entitled their ancestors to become contracting parties to a treaty at all; and, when such adherence on our part to the letter of the treaty involves the ruin and misery of millions of human beings, on whose behalf common humanity compels us to interfere.

Wheaton puts the case very clearly.

"Treaties," he writes, "properly so called, or faedera, are those of friendship and alliance, commerce and navigation, which, even if perpetual in terms, expire, of course, in case either of the contracting parties loses its existence as an independent State." The treaty between Mir Jafir and Lord Clive was a mere personal one, although not precisely so defined in terms. Even had it been otherwise, such a treaty could never bind us now to maintain upon the throne an idle, dissolute ruler, whose avarice and lusts were gratified at the expense of an industrious population.

Such agitations as those which have lately been got up in favour of deposed princes may or may not be generally due to interested motives; upon this point I do not even venture to form an opinion, much less to insinuate the existence of such motives in individual cases. But I do say again and again that such agitations are futile and dangerous. The people of India must not be taught that our hold upon the Peninsula is so loose that any dissatisfied pensioner of our Government may count upon the support of agitators at home, and beginning with a prayer for the continuance of his pension end by dictating the cession of a Province.

We should not teach the natives of India that people at home have no confidence in the administration there, but believe the local Indian Government to be pursuing a career of despotism and iniquity. Such agitations in favour of deposed tyrants resting, as they do, their claims to popular sympathy solely upon their denunciations of Government acts, are both insulting and disloyal.

Let there be a tribunal by all means before which native princes may plead their rights, but let it be a judicial tribunal composed of those whose experience entitles them to judge such questions. "The Princes of India, their rights and duties," can never be satisfactorily discussed in popular lectures before a mixed London audience of whom not one in fifty knows the difference between a Nawab and a Nautchee.—I am, Sir, yours &c.,

E. H. PALMER.

A MILITIA FOR INDIA.—IV.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In Lord Napier of Magdala's minute published in page 281 of your issue of the 18th inst., that experienced soldier invites attention to the vast extent of country in India which we have to protect, the difficulty of obtaining good recruits, and the danger of having other recruiting agents bidding against us, who can offer greater advantages than we can.

That the Sikhs have not lost their wonted dash and contempt of death, may be inferred from the recent insurrection of 300 men badly armed against the British power. That they may hereafter be found invaluable in crushing Mohammedan rebels can be easily shown. The question is, how to attach them to our cause, and to make them eager to enter our ranks.

An officer of much experience in the Punjab lately expressed his opinion, that under the Punjab land-tenure system the Sikh warriors prefer to stay at home, free, cultivating their fields, to service as soldiers under our Articles of War. The same causes which check recruiting in England, check it among the Sikhs.

But in England we have a Militia and a Volunteer Force, which preserve the martial spirit of the nation in sufficient activity. What I advocate is a Militia in the Punjab, North-West Provinces, and Behar, which will combine economy with efficiency, and loyalty with self-respect; which will enable our Reserves to spend eleven months at home in time of peace, and educate them in a martial desire to join the Regular Army during a time of war.

In para. 13 of the Duke of Argyll's Despatch, published in Page 281 of your paper, the Home Government appears to have forgotten two chief causes, which enabled a few hundred wicked sepoys of the Bengal Army to drag their childish comrades with them into rebellion.

1st. The policy of Government in depriving of power the officers commanding regiments, and in centralising power in the hands of the Head Quarter's Staff, who knew not the individual sepoys, and could not sympathise with them. This fatal error of policy was boldly denounced by General Jacob.

2nd. The enlisting of great numbers of Brahmins (priest caste) who, however personally brave, ruined the discipline of our regiments.

In comparing the Bengal with the Madras Army it is necessary to bear in mind that the widespread mutiny of the former was owing to the errors of our Government; those sepoys who were saved from the crime of mutiny owed their escape to the heroic devotion of their Regimental Officers.

I think that it will be admitted by the most ardent admirers of the Madras Native army that the best regiment in that Presidency would not have relished an encounter with the Boussire warriors in the Umbeyla Pass.

We must bear in mind Lord Napier's warning that other agents for recruiting may appear, who would offer greater inducements than we can; they might offer the plunder of the rich cities of India.

We have constituted ourselves the guardians of India, and cannot, therefore, permit plundering, which native soldiers so much enjoy. We cannot, as in the Mutiny, allow our mercenaries to plunder Delhi and Lucknow. We cannot wink at our own soldiers plundering Allahabad a second time. We must be ready to offer many millions in cash in lieu of prize-money; we must be ready promptly to confiscate the lands of all proprietors who fail to assist us heartily, and to divide such lands among our native soldiers.—Yours faithfully, T.

CIVIL PENSION CODE.—The Acting gov. gen. in council is pleased to direct that the following be added at the end of Rule 1, Sec. 66, Civil Pension Code:—And gratuities are to be calculated on "average emoluments" (as defined in this Rule) instead of on "emoluments."

INDIAN FINANCE.

The Times of India admits that India is a poor, comparatively a very poor, country, but maintains that it were it even poorer than it is, when taking together its revenues from land and opium, which are not taxation, its Government has a royal estate yielding £30,000,000 a year, and the balance to be made up by direct and indirect taxation does not reach over two shillings and sixpence a head of the population, that in these circumstances any financier worthy of the name ought not to find it difficult to provide for its distribution in such a manner as to create the minimum instead of the maximum of discontent, which we have been accustomed to in this country of late years. Setting principles altogether aside, we are wholly and entirely at a loss to understand why the Government of India insist—apparently obstinately insist—in the face of overwhelming proof of its unsuitableness to this country, and its extreme unpopularity, upon imposing an income-tax for the purpose of raising a paltry million of money which could be obtained in a dozen other ways without causing any very great amount of discontent. They must be aware of the opinion lately expressed of this tax by President Grant in regard to America. If they have not read the able article on this subject in the December number of the Revue de Deux Mondes, they cannot be ignorant of the opinion which the President of the French Republic holds on the subject in regard to France; and yet it has been determined, we are told, to re-levy this tax at the rate of one per cent. for next year, and down to a very low figure of income, in a country two centuries behind France and possibly four behind America. It has been stated that the Government of India are not responsible in this matter; that they merely register and carry out the decrees of her Majesty's Secretary of State; but we hardly think the Duke of Argyll would issue orders on such a subject opposed to the views of the Government of India. Be that as it may, however, the responsibility, with whomsoever it rests, is grave and serious, and the public ought to know upon whose shoulders it should be placed. It may be thought that the removal of the tax at the present moment might politically have an evil effect. We regret to be compelled to admit that the subject from this stand-point is worthy of very thoughtful consideration; but whatever be the conclusion arrived at on this point, we trust that some promise will be held out that this irritating impost will be removed or largely modified at an early date, and that that promise, when made, will not be broken. The Government ought not to forget that when this tax was first imposed, namely, after the Mutiny, all estates of the community, native as well as European, acquiesced, if not in its justice, at least in the necessity which existed for its imposition. It was the solemn promise made by Mr. Wilson, which the people think was broken, when, after the brief interval of a year, it was re-imposed without any apparent necessity for it, and thus they consider a breach of faith. Can it be said that they have not reason on their side? We pause for a reply.

THE CRIMINAL'S PARADISE.

The Indian Daily News holds that if, as has been stated and is generally believed, Lord Mayo visited Port Blair in order to accomplish a great work, it is more than ever necessary, now that his Lordship has been arrested in his purpose, that that work should not be left undone. The discipline maintained at the Andamans has long since passed into a by-word; and whether the shortcomings of that discipline are referable to imperfect supervision on the part of the officers appointed to enforce it or to inherent defects in the rules which they are required to enforce, it is time that a careful inquiry should be instituted into the working of the whole system, and that its ascertained defects should once and for ever be removed. The trial of the convict Divine, for the murder of a fellow-convict at Port Blair, showed us not long ago that, under the prison discipline of the chief penal settlement of India, it was possible for a scoundrel, who had only a few months previously brutally murdered a woman who had been living under his protection and had borne him children, to live in freedom and luxury, and to indulge by night in drunken debauches. Later and more painful experiences have taught us that, under this same prison discipline, it was easy for a ruffian, convicted only a few years ago for the murder of a tribal enemy, to lie in wait after dark for the Viceroy of India. It is not only because Lord Mayo has been foully assassinated, but because a prison discipline under which such things are possible is a disgrace to any civilised country, that public opinion demands a careful investigation into, and an immediate suppression of, the frightful license which obtains in this penal settlement. It is true that the law, as it stands, draws a broad distinction between penal servitude and mere transportation to the Andamans; but if the object of the law is to make all its punishments deterrent, is no one responsible for the fact that the Andamans have been converted into a pleasant paradise for criminals? When the exposures which attended the trial of the convict Divine left no shred of doubt regarding the real state of affairs at the And-man Islands, we know that the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal absolutely refused to send any more convicts to that settlement until admitted defects in the discipline which obtained in it had been removed. We also know that very shortly before the late Viceroy started on his recent tour for Burmah, Mr. Campbell again pressed on the attention of the Supreme Government the urgent necessity that existed for early action in the matter. Mr. Campbell was told in reply to communicate with Gen. Stewart—with what result? It is not only intolerable that valuable lives should be sacrificed, but it is scandalous that the discipline of the chief penal settlement of India should be such as the discipline maintained at the Andamans is admitted on all hands to be. It is not from any desire to attribute blame to Gen. Stewart that we desire to be informed precisely what, if any, measures were adopted after the disclosures made at Divine's trial to remove the scandal to which we have referred. Gen. Stewart may have done all that any superintendent could do to remedy the evil with which he was called on to cope, but we wish to know what he has done.

THE LOSHAI EXPEDITION.

The Friend of India points out one somewhat painful circumstance in connection with the expedition. When the two columns were decided upon, a third force, which the Rajah of Manipore was expected to provide, was invited to co-operate, and a force was raised, amounting to rather more than 2,000 men, who were provisioned by relays of coolies from the Manipore State. The force was entrusted by the Rajah to two officers, who were accompanied by General Nuthall, the Political Agent at Manipore. We stated at the time of the appointment that the evident intention was to give General Nuthall an opportunity of taking the field against his old enemies. He had the misfortune in a former expedition to have thrown upon him the virtual exploration of an unknown country and the testing of a climate which, taken at the wrong time, would prove too much for any force we could send. It is a fact, however, in spite of all the disadvantages of that first trial, made, too, as it turned out, at the wrong time of the year, that General Nuthall, without engineering or roadmaking parties, advanced even farther than General Bouchier since did in the same time; no discredit to General Bouchier, but necessary to be mentioned that justice may be done to General Nuthall. On this late occasion there seemed to be a chance of the Manipore contingent proving of some value to General Bouchier. Unhappily, however, it was deemed necessary to order the Rajah of Manipore not to advance beyond Tsekapi, and a roadmaking party which had been ordered in advance a little beyond this was attacked, as our readers will remember, at the very outset of the expedition. We believe that General Bouchier held the advance beyond Tsekapi to be disobedience of orders, but whether that was so or not, certain it is that the Manipore contingent was kept for upwards of forty days in one position, and that position an unhealthy jungle. The men expected they were to fight their traditional enemies, instead of which they were kept in a position of guard, which no uncivilised men could be expected to understand, and eventually the coolies fell away, and could not be induced to carry the supplies. Next the force itself followed, and in the end, the Rajah declared that come what might he would retire from Sebo, the most advanced post, but by that time without provisions. The retirement was made early in February in spite of General Nuthall's protests, and the Manipore contingent returned to its own country, without in reality having struck a blow. It is the one force, however, that has had the honour of having received a large number of people who had been held in captivity by the Loshai, and who escaped owing to the onward progress of the invading columns. It is General Nuthall's misfortune to have been associated with this contingent, and in spite of the fact that he had no control there cannot be a doubt that his position must be unpleasant, not from any fault, for we do not see that any fault could by possibility be imputed to him so far as the retirement of the force is concerned. Indeed, we do not know yet whether it was possible for the Rajah himself to keep his contingent in the field, though we believe that General Nuthall thinks it was, but, at any rate, the Political Agent would not have withdrawn under any ordinary circumstances.

LOSHAI EXPEDITION.

LEI COLUMN; STATION NO. 14, VILLAGE OF SALEM, Feb. 11.—We are all very busy, and the camp is all astir making preparations for the forward march to-morrow towards Lall-Burha. All the baggage has been reduced to the lowest limit possible, all the weak and sickly men have been weeded out, all extra camp followers and ponies sent back to No. 10 station, and all the sick of the different corps will be left here, also the reserve ammunition, only sixty rounds per man being taken. The force is of the following strength:—400 infantry and the half battery M.T., the regiments going are the head quarters 22nd P.I., and a wing of the 44th regiment S.S.I., 200 of each. All deficiencies in these corps caused by sickness, and reducing them below the strength of 200 each, will be made up from the 42nd regiment N.I., the head-quarters of which, under Colonel Rattray, marched in this morning. The 42nd will hold this post during the advance on Lall-Burha. A stockade has been built here, which will contain the Commissariat stores, being sent up from the rear, spare baggage, &c., left behind by the advancing column, and will save generally a temporary depot. There is also a stockaded position on a neighbouring ridge to hold a small picket. Poiboy does not seem inclined to come in, so intimation has been sent him that unless he appears his villages will be burnt. Large stores of rice have been brought in from caves and other hiding places in the adjacent jungle. The villagers, although they visit our camp freely and bring in various articles of food for sale, have not returned to the villages, but are still living out in the jungles. From many places amongst the trees smoke can be seen rising. They live low down at the foot of the slopes, evidently to be near a good water supply. The Loshais seen daily in camp are of different races, large numbers of them being "Poes" from the frontier of Burmah, or they are, perhaps, more properly speaking, a large intermediate tribe between the Loshais and the tribes of independent Burmah. Lall-Burha and the other Loshai chiefs pay tribute to the "Poes," so they are evidently of some importance, and may prove of some trouble to us in the event of Lall-Burha making a stand, and being aided by them. We have had some rain lately, but that seems to have cleared off, and at present we are having splendid weather—very cold at night; and in the morning—the ground all round being covered with hoar frost at dawn. We are quite free, I am happy to say, from sickness; only a few cases of fever in camp. We expect to be away from this in eighteen or twenty days, by the end of which time the matter ought to be settled, as we are getting rapidly to the end of our good weather. I believe after to-morrow we shall be away from our dawn communication for some days, so I shall be unable to write, but I will keep up a daily account of what is going on, and send it you by the first opportunity. Endeavours have been made to let General Brownlow know where we are, and a possible rendezvous has been fixed by the Survey, and the lat. and lon. telegraphed to him. We hope to signal the other column before our return. Rockets are being taken on for the purpose. General Bouchier's wound is progressing favourably.—Indian Daily News Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

MEDICAL.—The British medical officers of the Meerut Circle are about to lose their medical chief, Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals Dr. Gordon, who goes home on relief by Dr. Innes.

CIVIL.—The Indian Daily News informs us that the question of distributing the cost of the annuities of the civil servants in Mysore and the Hyderabad Assigned Districts, between these provinces and the Imperial revenues of India, is at present under consideration.

MILITARY.—It is reported that Sir H. Tombs will shortly be transferred from Allahabad to the Oudh division, and that Major Schmid, his present Assistant Adjutant-General, will join him in the same appointment in August.

ALLAHABAD.—The Mahomedan community of Allahabad have held a public meeting in the Khooshree Baugh, to express their abhorrence of, and grief at, the assassination of the Viceroy. They were to hold another meeting to return thanks for the preservation of the Prince of Wales.

NATIVE LOYALTY.—The Talookdars of Oudh have, it is said, resolved to present a congratulatory address to her Majesty on the recovery of the Prince of Wales.—The Maharajah of Jallawar has presented Rs. 1,000, and the Rajah of Nagode Rs. 250 to the Lawrence School at Aboe as thank offerings on the recovery of the Prince of Wales.

KATMANDOO.—We (Pioneer) believe the announcement that Colonel James was to succeed Colonel Lawrence as Resident at Katmandoo was premature, and indeed erroneous. We hear that Mr. C. Girdlestone, formerly Under-Secretary in the Foreign Department, more lately Resident in Cashmere, and last, Deputy Commissioner in the Central Provinces, is to obtain the appointment.

UMBALLA.—The Hindoos of Umballa have, according to the Mofussilite, complained of the conduct of the Mahomedan butchers in carrying beef slaughtered at the cantonment shambles through the Sadr Bazaar on their way to the shous, and Mr. Forsyth has been called on by the Punjab Government for an explanation.

THE NEW MEMBER OF THE HOME COUNCIL.—Sir Louis Mallet will command as much of the confidence of Manchester as a merely commercial statesman, not also a merchant, can. His warm sympathy with Mr. Cobden is well known in Lancashire, and Mr. Cobden's name is still good to conjure by there. The appointment, satisfy or annoy whom it may, is one of the best that could have been made.—Friend of India.

DECLINE OF COTTON CULTIVATION IN BENGAL.—The Bengal Times laments the decline of cotton cultivation in Bengal, and the decay of the art which in years gone by produced that miracle of manufacture—Dacca muslin. A "piece" of this mulmul weighs between nine and ten tolahs, is ten yards in length, and valued at thirty rupees the yard. But nowadays it does not pay the Dacca weavers to produce such an exquisite fabric, and the abrowan or khas mulmul of Dacca has become almost a thing of the past. The peculiar cotton, photee, employed in the manufacture, is therefore hardly now cultivated at all.

PRUDENT COUNSEL.—A late number of the Journal of the Anjuman-i-Punjab, under the heading "Fikah," says that one of the causes why the Mahomedans of India do not avail themselves of English education, is the belief entertained by most of them that education is religiously prohibited. The editor, however, shows that the belief is a mistaken one. He says:—"God commands in the Koran:—'Verily he who is acquainted with philosophy shall be endowed with incalculable blessings;' and in another place:—'Worldly riches are of no duration.' No language spoken in India can teach us philosophy in all its various branches and minute details better than the language of the reigning Government, and, therefore, it behoves all Mahomedans to learn that language, and fully avail themselves of the advantages offered by English education."

BE JUST AND FEAR NOT.—The Hindoo Patriot in his last issue writes very worthily. Our contemporary notices "the deep consternation" which prevails among the native community, especially the Mahomedan section, lest the English in India should be provoked to interference by the late assassinations, and it tells them that they have no cause to fear, that the English in India cannot stoop to injustice. There was a time, the Patriot reminds its countrymen, when the Empire was shaken to its centre by a great military revolt, when Englishmen, women and children were daily slaughtered, when, in short, the British power trembled in the balance; but "even in that crisis English statesmen did not swerve from the path of justice." "Let," says the Hindoo Patriot, "our countrymen remember that the acts of wretches like Abdulla and Shere Ali will not in the slightest degree disturb the majestic march of British statesmanship in India." As for the Government of India, if it will pardon our presumption, urge it—Be just and fear not.—Pioneer, Feb. 29.

INSPECTION OF THE CALCUTTA VOLUNTEERS.—The Calcutta Volunteer Rifles were inspected on Saturday morning, Feb. 24, by Brigadier-General Ingall, C.B. The corps fell in about half-past six A.M. on their usual drill ground on the Maidan, the number present being about 350. At the conclusion of the manoeuvres, General Ingall expressed his satisfaction with the appearance of the corps, the steadiness of the men, and the knowledge which officers and men had shown of their drill. He praised especially the marching past in column, and declared that on the whole there had been a marked improvement in the corps since he last inspected it. The general and staff then rode off, and line was formed and ranks opened for the inspection of the Sniders by Captain Mackinnon, the inspector of musketry of the division. The annual distribution of prizes will most likely take place about the 9th March, on which occasion it is probable that the regiment will be inspected by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

THE KING OF SIAM.—A gentleman who has seen a good deal of the King of Siam during his Majesty's stay in India describes him as being singularly observant and sensible. In the course of his travels in India he made several very shrewd remarks, showing the practical and utilitarian turn of his mind. Thus, on looking at the Taj, he said it was very pretty, but a great waste of money; and when, at Bombay, some splendid diamonds were offered to him at a very high price, he said, "I would rather spend that money on making roads in my country." He more than once noticed the great display of jewellery made by the Native Rajahs, and expressed his wonder that they should wear such valuable ornaments. His own dress was handsome but very simple, and he wore very little jewellery. He enjoyed travelling very much, and was anxious to see as much of the country as possible. At Bombay he was to have spent a week of great gaiety; but, of his own motion, he stopped everything on account of Lord Mayo's assassination, which he felt most keenly. On the evening on which the sad news reached him, he could neither eat nor sleep, and he gave orders that all the usual ceremonies were to be dispensed with. The King's visit to India ought to have done good both to himself and to the Native Princes with whom he came in contact.—Englishman, Feb. 27.

THE ACTING VICEROY.—His Excellency Lord Napier of Merchistoun, Acting Governor-General of India, on taking his seat, made the following short speech, which we read was spoken in a touching way that added very much to the effect of the words:—"Gentlemen,—I have to claim your sympathy in the performance of the saddest duty of my life. The seat which I have the honour to occupy for a moment has been opened to me by a cruel crime perpetrated against the most just and compassionate of men! It would be superfluous for me now to expatiate on the merits of the Statesman and the friend whom we have lost, though no one knew those merits better than myself, and no one felt them more. Other voices more eloquent and authoritative have done full justice to the dead, but during the brief period of my presence in your deliberations it will be my study to honour his memory, to follow his counsels, and to benefit by his example. Gentlemen, if I find myself surrounded by friends, and not by strangers, it is still to his goodness that I owe this consolation and advantage. You gave your cordial, zealous, independent support to the Earl of Mayo in the labours and responsibilities of his beneficent and successful Government. I need not express my confidence that you will grant me the same assistance, of which I shall stand in far greater need."

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONERS IN THE PUNJAB.—The Assistant Commissioners in the Punjab lately presented a memorial to the Lieutenant-Governor bringing to his notice the slowness of promotion in that province for a considerable time past as having injuriously affected their prospects, and stating that they had reason to fear the stagnation would continue for some time longer unless some steps were taken by Government to remedy it. The Pioneer has published both the memorial and the answer of the Lieutenant-Governor in full. His Honour admits the slowness of promotion, but at the same time points out that "all the first-class and almost all the second-class assistants have, during the past year, been in charge of districts—a position which, he understands, is better than that held by civilians of the same standing in the North-West Provinces." He further points out that the position of several officers who left the Punjab Commission some years ago for the North-West Provinces is not better than that of their contemporaries in the Punjab, and at the same time rather ironically adds that he will be prepared to submit for favourable consideration the application of any Civilian who desires to leave the Punjab for the North-West. He informs them that a scheme for the reorganisation of the Executive and Judicial Services in the Punjab has been submitted, and recommends the memorialists to await patiently its result, for at present he can do nothing for them.

PUBLIC SORROW FOR LORD MAYO.—Throughout all India the melancholy news of the Viceroy's death has been received with the utmost sorrow and sympathy. The Maharajahs Jeypore and Sindia immediately ordered all the usual tokens of mourning. The King of Siam, at present in Bombay, declared, of course, against all festivities. The consular bodies, the trades associations, and all the religious bodies have either offered condolence to Lady Mayo, or, where that did not seem proper, made public references to her great grief. On Sunday evening Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen preached in the Brahma Mandir, and private prayers were offered up, the Mirror tells us, "for the peace of the soul of the departed nobleman, and for divine protection and care of his bereaved family. Total abstinence from all amusements was also observed, and simple, vegetable food only partaken. Telegrams had been sent previously to the Somajes at Bombay, Madras, and Lahore respectively, and letters by post to all other Mofussil Somajes requesting them to hold similar Divine Service on Sunday night." In nearly all the churches, also, references were made to the subject, and in a way far beyond what mere conventionalism demanded or could have obtained. It has indeed been a great national grief, common to all the vast and motley community of this Indian Empire, and at this moment the cloud rests as heavily as ever, upon Calcutta at all events, banishing all thought of amusement from most minds; and even business, which exacts so much, has been neglected.—Friend of India.

PATIALA GOVERNMENT ORDER.—His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab directs the publication of the following translation of an order of his Highness the Maharaja of Patiala, dated 14th February, 1872:—"Notification of the Office of Munshikhana, dated 14th February, 1872.—"His Highness the Maharaja has learned, from a telegram received from Jagahdri, on the night of the 13th, from the Private Secretary to the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor, and from a private letter from his Honour received this morning, that the Earl of Mayo, Viceroy and Governor-General of India, was assassinated at Port Blair (in the Island where convicts from India are sent) on the 8th instant, at seven in the evening. The assassin was a life convict on whom sentence of transportation had been passed, and who broke through the guard and stabbed his Excellency with a knife. His Highness announces with the deepest sorrow, the sad event, for general information in his territory; and directs all his employes and subjects to join him in mourning for the loss sustained by our Sovereign, her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, in the death of her most able, enlightened, and benevolent Viceroy, who has been untimely removed from us by the cruel hand of death, and who has left all those who had the honour of his friendship to remember how gracious, considerate, merciful, and just he was. The Maharajah feels extreme sorrow at the sad event, not alone that his Excellency was the Viceroy and the Representative of our Sovereign the Queen, but also that his Excellency was the friend of his Highness and the Patiala State; and to show the respect due to his memory, his Highness directs that on receipt of this order in every office, Nazamat, &c., all the usages which in this State are prescribed for the most mournful occasion be observed, that all the Government Offices in the State and the Bazzars of the Sudr Stations be closed for three days, that the hour-bells be not struck, nor the usual day and night guns fired.

THANKSGIVING DAY AT CALCUTTA.—The interior of the Cathedral yesterday forenoon presented a splendid appearance. His Excellency the Acting Governor-General and Lady Napier, his Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, the members of the Supreme Council, the Chief Justice and Judges of the High Court, and a large assembly of members of the Services, Civil, Military, and Naval, attended the Thanksgiving Service for the recovery of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and a great many ladies were also present. Many of these had, in accordance with the desire of the Acting Governor-General, laid aside mourning for this occasion, while others retained it; and the contrast of colours and the brilliant array of uniforms made the scene one of great display.—Englishman, Feb. 28. We understand that the Thanksgiving day was observed in the northern part of the town in right loyal spirit. There was a large gathering of Hindu gentlemen at the Bazar Bazaar Ghaut, where the Gunja was worshipped, and offerings were presented to the goddess for the recovery of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. Hymns in Bengalee, composed for the occasion, were also sung, for which, however, we are sorry we can make no room. The procession then, preceded by native music, visited other places of worship in that part of the town, and after going through the same ceremonies as at the ghaut, broke up at about one o'clock P.M. Our informant says that up to that late hour the Baboos had religiously abstained from all kind of food and drink—a fact which, we admit, is not wanting in significance. The members of the Parsee community of Calcutta assembled on Tuesday at the Fire temple of Rustomjee Cawasjee, Esq., and offered up special prayers of thanksgiving for the recovery of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. A subscription list was then circulated among those present, at the instance of Mr. Manockjee Rustomjee, and about Rs. 1,200 was subscribed in aid of the suffering Zoroastrians who had arrived at Bombay from Persia.—Indian Daily News.

LORD MAYO'S LAST MOMENTS.—All the circumstances of this mournful event are extraordinary and appalling. The guard appears to have been throughout the day most attentive—officially attentive. All apprehensions, if there ever were such apprehensions, seen, so far as we know, to have been at an end when the party reached Mount Harriet. All danger, if there ever was any danger, which could have been foreseen was, apparently, at an end when the fearful tragedy occurred. At no other moment during the day had his Excellency's person been unprotected; at that particular moment, dressed as he was in a white tussar-silk coat, and lighted by torches, he was the prominent central figure of a group, the remaining members of which were comparatively hidden in gloom. Fate—circumstance—everything—appeared to favour the assassin. So far as we have yet heard, no blame seems to be justly attachable to either the guard or the person responsible for the arrangements for the Viceroy's safety—arrangements which, we believe, received his sanction and approval, although had he had his own way entirely he would probably have dispensed with a formal guard altogether. Some of the last words of the Viceroy will interest his many personal friends and the much larger number of those who, though they knew him only by sight, admired the genial face and open, honest expression of the man. Up to the end he was always thoughtful of others and considerate of their feelings. Before ascending the hill, a little more than an hour before his death, noticing that the aide-de-camp, who was then in attendance upon him, was tired, as were most of the party, he turned to him and told him he had better stay at the foot of the hill until the party returned. Again, while going up on the only available pony, he evidently did not like riding while every one else was walking, so he got off, saying in a pleasant manner, "I'll walk now—one of you get on the pony." We are not surprised to hear that at the trial on board the Glasgow more than one statesman was unable to give evidence without almost breaking down with emotion. It must have been a severe trial to those who had known him so intimately, and been so much in his company, to see the manly form laid low, and to know too bitterly that they had had no power to raise a timely hand to avert "the deep damnation of his taking off."—Englishman.

A CRUEL JOKE.—Surely the following slipped into the Delhi Gazette unseen by any one except the P. D.:—"The unprovoked and brutal murder, within a few months, of the Viceroy of India and the Acting Chief Justice of Bengal, will compel a reconsideration of the kind of punishment to be meted out to the murderer of a European. The wretch who struck down with his knife the lamented Peer whose corpse has now left Government House for England, preferred death to transportation. At Port Blair he asked the guard to shoot him, and at Peshawur requested that he might be hanged rather than sent to the Andamans. By hanging this man, we shall fulfil his desire. He committed the murder with a view to notoriety, to fancied merit, and to a sort of martyrdom. Other cases of the sort will certainly follow, if we meet his views by sending him, as he fondly hopes, to Paradise. The Government, we believe, is at a loss how to act. We venture to offer a suggestion, which some would-be philanthropists will undoubtedly oppose, but which, if carried out, will assuredly put a stop to the class of crimes referred to. Let it be enacted that any native of India who murders a European, shall, upon conviction, be dealt with as follows:—1. He shall be branded in the forehead with a large M, to denote his crime. 2. Both his arms shall be amputated above the elbow. 3. He shall be transported to England for twenty-one years—sent round the Cape confined in an iron cage—whipped once a month, on the same day of the month and at the hour of the day on which he committed the murder, exhibited with the wild beasts in the Tower of London during the whole period of his transportation; then, if he survive, put to death by decapitation, his body given for dissection, and burnt, if the felon be a Mussulman, or buried, if a Hindoo. Such an enactment, if widely circulated in the vernaculars, will have the effect of preventing such deeds of blood as have recently laid a Viceroy and a Chief Justice low. The life of the civis Romanus will be held sacred, under the strongest motives that can actuate those most likely to violate it. In short, the primary end of criminal legislation will be answered: the most desperate characters will be deterred from crime by the prospect of a doom from which the boldest must shrink. Great severity is, in such cases, the truest mercy to all concerned, excepting the wretch to whom mercy cannot be extended without endangering the State. The magistrate is “the minister of God,” and is commanded “not to bear the sword in vain.”

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, March 1.—Nothing of interest has transpired during the past week, and business remains in the same position as we last reported it. Grey Twist: For the higher numbers there has been a rather better feeling during the past few days, and prices are firm.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, March 1.—Jute: There has been a good amount of business done; inferior qualities have fallen in price, whilst the best descriptions have maintained their previous rates. Sulphate: The market closes firm, with a slight rise in prices. Linseed: There has been a small business done in old seed. Raw Silk: The business has been chiefly confined to native Cossimbazar, Gonates, and Jungypore, at from 13 to 17 per seer. There is hardly any stock in the market. Corns: Offers at lower rates continue to be refused by holders, and no business is reported.

MONEY MARKET.—CALCUTTA, March 1.—Money remains tolerably easy in the bazaar. EXCHANGE: There has been a further decline in the sterling rate this week of ¼ to ½ per cent.

Madras.

MADRAS BANK.—It is stated as a fact that the cashier of the Madras Bank at Cochin has offered to recover a lac and a half of bad debts for the directors if they will withdraw a criminal prosecution instituted against him. The total losses to this bank by his alleged dishonesty are set down at three lacs.

MILITARY.—The wing of the gallant 21st from Thyetmyo, which arrived here on Friday last from the Frontier Station, embarked on board the s.s. Arco for Madras, and sailed yesterday for the same port. The 21st bear away with them the best wishes of the population of Burmah for their future welfare and prosperity.—Rangoon Times, Feb. 12.

CINCHONA.—From an analysis by Mr. J. Broughton, Government, quinologist, of cinchona bark, grown on the Biligiri Rungum Hills—Mysore, it appears that the bark was of good appearance, and consisted entirely of C. Succirubra. Its analysis gave in per centages of dry bark, total alkaloids, 7.50 per cent.; quinine, 2.01 per cent.; cinchonidine and cinchonine, 5.49 per cent.; pure sulphate quinine obtained crystallised, 1.09 per cent.; other sulphates do., 4.84 per cent.

REWARD FOR SERVICES.—After an honourable service under Government of over fifty-two years, Mr. M. R. S. Edwards, the late Collector of Customs at Rangoon, was allowed to retire on a pension of five hundred pounds sterling. The Chief Commissioner however, under whom the Collector had served, considered Mr. Edwards's services entitled him to a distinguishing and superior rate of pension from that to which he was entitled by mere length of service. The Chief Commissioner's recommendation to the Government of India was submitted in due form to the Secretary of State for India, and a reply has been just received from the India Office, announcing the fact that the Secretary of State had been pleased to approve of six hundred pounds sterling being granted to Mr. Edwards from the date of his retirement.—Rangoon Times.

ATTACK ON AN ENGLISH OFFICER.—A correspondent of the Times of India, writing from Secunderabad on the 12th of February, says that Colonel Hackett, of the 76th Regiment, whilst returning to that station during the night, was attacked by about twelve natives, armed with stones and sticks, his gari knocked off the road, and himself stunned by a blow on the head from a stone. He had several boxes with him, containing valuable silver plate belonging to the 2-24th Regiment, and these were at once taken off by the thieves. After recovering his senses the Colonel proceeded to a thannah about five hundred yards distant, and persuaded some policemen to accompany him back to the spot; but though, on arriving there, they could hear the thieves breaking open the boxes, they refused to attempt to take them, and the robbers got off undiscovered with their booty.

A SQUABBLE ABOUT THE BURIAL OF COMMANDER ADAMS, OF THE "DAPHNE."—When H.M.S. Daphne, with the dead body of Commander Adams on board, arrived in the roads on Monday, the officer in command at once sent ashore for a coffin, and for permission to land and bury the body. The coffin was procured and the necessary permission obtained. Meanwhile, it dawned upon the authorities that it was a very improper thing to allow a vessel with cholera on board to anchor in the port and have free communication with the shore. The officer commanding was therefore informed that he ought to have hoisted the yellow flag and waited for orders, and that he was instructed to proceed at once to sea and there bury his dead. The officer replied that, having placed his deceased commander in a coffin for burial on shore (according to his wish) with the permission of the authorities, he could not uncoffin the remains and prepare them for burial at sea. The Government insisted that the body should not come on shore. The commanding officer equally insisted upon taking it on shore, and, ultimately, the Government gave way on something very like an intimation that the body would be sent ashore with or without permission. The body was therefore, landed late on Monday night, and buried in St. Mary's Cemetery on Tuesday morning. There was no military funeral, but the Governor and some members of his staff attended at the interment.—Madras Times.

PAPER CURRENCY.—Paper currency agencies have been opened in the Madras Presidency at Cuddapah, Bellary, Bangalore, Negapatam, Tuticorin, Ootacamund, Trichinopoly, and Cocanada.

THE COURT MARTIAL ON LIEUTENANT MONEY-KYRLE, 21ST FUSILIERS.—The Madras Athenæum gives the following record of the court-martial held on Lieutenant W. L. E. Money-Kyrle, of the 2-21st Fusiliers, who has been released from arrest, and had his sword and sash returned to him by the Adjutant of the regiment on the 19th Feb. The following were the charges preferred against him:—1st Charge: For having made false statements, respecting Assistant Surgeon Walsh's having visited him, when sick (in a letter to the Adjutant of the left wing 2-21st Fusiliers, 27th November, 1871), and respecting the circumstance of his removal from his quarters to the Regimental hospital. 2nd Charge: For having feigned sickness and ill-health, thereby avoiding his military duties. 3rd Charge: For having made false statements to Assistant Surgeon Walsh and to the commanding officer of the wing, respecting his being or not being on duty, when he applied to be placed upon the sick report on Nov. 16, 1871. It has not been thought necessary to have either a Court of Inquiry or a court-martial on this young officer. And after being under arrest for more than ten weeks, he is released without having had a chance of refuting these grave charges. We are extremely surprised at the conduct of the military authorities in thus treating Lieutenant Money-Kyrle. A charge of malingering brought against a poor respectable private would undoubtedly be felt keenly by him. But the idea of bringing such a charge against an officer of eight years' standing! It is simply preposterous.

THE SHWEGHYEEN ROW.—Our readers will remember that we mentioned some time ago that there had been a row at the station of Shweghyeen between the civil officers and a resident missionary. The two young civil officers who were the cause of the lark very nearly came to grief by losing their appointments. However, in consideration of their youth and inexperience, they lost five steps in the list of assistant commissioners. The lark, we understood, consisted of these young gentlemen buying or getting a packet of crackers on a Chinese feast-day, when the Courts and public offices were all shut, and setting fire to them, and, while in a state of ignition and popping away, the packet was flung into the verandah of the house occupied by the missionary. This act itself was nothing more than a mere boyish lark on the part of the young gentlemen who were guilty of perpetrating it, and a reprimand, with removal to another station, would have been ample punishment for the offence. But General Fytche took a serious view of the case, and had the young men reduced five steps in the list on which their names stood. This was equal to denying them any promotion for a period of two or three years. Their case was appealed, and it came before the Hon. Ashley Eden, who preferred a more lenient course to that recommended by General Fytche. We now find that the original punishment has been by an act of clemency cancelled. The names of Mr. H. Buckle and Mr. A. Hough are now to be replaced to their original position, under an order published in the British Burmah Gazette, and with the authority of his Excellency the Viceroy. As the circumstance will now soon be forgotten, we trust young gentlemen in the Commission will remember to keep their sportive tendencies within bounds, and not attempt to frighten ladies, for their cause is sure to be taken up seriously, and may entail heavy penalties on the larkers.—Rangoon Times, Feb. 13.

MILITARY.—The strength of H.M.'s 8th Regiment N.I., which arrived in Poonah on the evening of the 24th ult., is as follows:—292 men, 155 women, 155 children, 73 followers.—Deccan Herald.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.—The post of Superintending Engineer N.D., just vacated by Col. J. W. Playfair, R.E., going on leave, will be taken by Col. Jenkin Jones, now at the Mint. Col. Ballard is expected shortly, and will resume his post as Mint Master.

EDUCATION OF SOLDIERS' CHILDREN.—Sir Seymour Fitzgerald having been requested by the Supreme Government to choose a competent and able officer to take a seat on the Commission which is coming from Calcutta to inquire into the mode and expense of educating soldiers' children, his Excellency has selected Captain Prendergast Walsh for that duty. This officer has no doubt been chosen on account of the great interest he has always taken in the details of army matters.

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.—The post of Professor of Anatomy at the Grant Medical College became vacant two or three weeks since by reason of Dr. Knapp's absence on sick leave. We are glad to learn that his Excellency has appointed Dr. Holmsted to fill the chair for the present. This is a selection of the kind which will strengthen the College. Dr. Holmsted occupied the same post once before for a few months, and with very marked advantage to the students.

POLITICAL.—One of our daily contemporaries says, "It is rumoured that Colonel G. S. A. Anderson, Political Agent at Kolapore, will be the successor at Baroda of Colonel Barr; " and the other deprecates in strong terms the proposed appointment of Col. W. W. Anderson, of Kattiawar, to the Guicowar's capital. We have ground to believe that both these guesses are beside the mark. The post of British resident at Baroda was offered two or three weeks since to another political officer, and we know of no reason likely to cause him to decline the coveted appointment. We stop short of naming him, because it has not yet transpired that he has accepted the offer.—Times of India.

NEEMUCH.—A letter from Neemuch, dated the 13th instant, stated that Captain Bryant, Commissariat officer at that station, who was en route to Bombay, had been ordered back from Mhow after having been relieved by Captain VanHeythuyzen. Indeed, it was said that several petitions against Captain Bryant and his head clerk were laid before Colonel Lucas, and the impression may have been left on some minds that it was these petitions that led to Captain Bryant's recall. That impression, however, is erroneous. No petitions have been sent in to Colonel Lucas regarding Captain Bryant. It is true that petitions have been sent in regarding the conduct of his late head clerk; and these are being inquired into. We believe Captain Bryant's presence at Neemuch was called for, as he was the only officer who could supply Colonel Lucas with the information he was in quest of.—Times of India, March 4.

HANDSOME DONATION BY THE HON. MR. SASSOON.—To commemorate the happy restoration to health of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales the Hon. A. D. Sassoon, C.S.I., on Tuesday made a formal offer to the Governor of Bombay of half a lac of rupees in addition to a lac previously given, for building a new Elphinstone High School. Mr. Sassoon's first contribution for this purpose was given on the occasion of the Duke of Edinburgh's visit to Bombay; and it was at that time understood that Government would supply the rest of the money required for the School. There has been some difficulty, however, in getting any grant of public money for the school; and, rather than that there should be any further delay, Mr. Sassoon has now increased his gift to a lac and a half, a sum which it is believed will be sufficient to pay for the construction of a commodious and handsome school. It is hoped that Sir S. Fitzgerald will be able to lay the foundation stone before leaving Bombay.—Bombay Gazette.

THANKSGIVING DAY IN BOMBAY.—The day was kept as a close holiday. Most of the native shops were closed, and our native citizens of all creeds and classes attended their mosques and temples, where special thanks were offered. The Government offices were closed, and, by spontaneous action as well as through circulars issued by the Trades' Association, every European establishment was shut. Special services were conducted in all the churches. In the Cathedral a very imposing ceremonial was witnessed. Possibly at the same hour when the officiating Viceroy and his staff were entering the Cathedral in Calcutta to take part in rejoicing, the Governor of Bombay and his suite entered the Cathedral in Churchgate-street. While the organ was pealing forth a theme of gladness, two aides-de-camp walked slowly up the nave; his Excellency followed, in the Civil Service uniform, and wearing the decoration of the Order of the Star of India; then came the Chief Justice in full robes; then his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, followed by the Judges of the High Court in their full robes; after them came the Secretaries to Government; and then came a number of military and naval officers in full uniform. The greater part of the nave was set apart for his Excellency the Governor and those accompanying him, and the aisles were well filled by the general congregation. The sight of so many scarlet and blue uniforms among the dresses of the civilians was very pretty. After the organ had ceased playing, the service commenced. On its conclusion, his Excellency and suite left in the order they arrived, the congregation standing as they did when his Excellency entered the Cathedral, and the organist sending forth the well-known "Hallelujah Chorus." We may remark that we understand the collections in the Cathedral were miserably low considering the quality of the congregation. The royal ensign was flying on the Cathedral flag-staff, and fireworks were let off in numerous parts of the native town.

TROOPS FROM ENGLAND.—H.M.'s iron troopship Crocodile, 4173 tons, 700-horse power, Commander Parkin, arrived in Bombay Harbour on the 26th Feb., with troops from England, via the Suez Canal. There being a few cases of scarletina and measles on board (which is the case generally on troopships), it has been deemed advisable, as a precautionary measure, to put the ship in a sort of quarantine for two or three days.—H.M.'s Indian troopship Malabar, 4,414 tons, 700-horse power, 3 guns, Commander Sholto Douglas, arrived in Bombay Harbour at 6.30 A.M. on the 2nd Feb., with troops from England, via the Suez Canal. She left Portsmouth on the 25th January last, arriving at Queenstown on the 27th, and sailing from thence on the 28th. She reached Malta on the 8th Feb., leaving the same on the 9th, arriving at Port Said on the 13th, and Suez on the 16th. She left Suez on the 17th, and arrived in Bombay Harbour on the 2nd March. She encountered fine weather throughout, with light breeze from north-east across the Indian Ocean. This is the final voyage of the Malabar to Bombay this season. She brought 55 officers, 14 ladies, 15 children, 1,067 men, 100 women and 122 children. The following are the names of officers, together with their ladies and children:—

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, March 4.—The Grey Goods market opened with a moderate inquiry, but the absence of any improvement in the demand produced a very dull feeling in the market at the close. Twist continues very steady, and Metals generally are firm.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, March 4.—Cotton: The market closes at a decline generally of about Rs. 12 per candy in nearly all descriptions, except machine-ginned Broach, for which dealers are heavily under contract. The total purchasers for export during the week is about 10,000 bales. In other articles of Export there is no change worthy of note.

MONEY MARKET.—BOMBAY, March 4.—EXCHANGE: Although the amount of paper offering has been by no means large, rates close the turn against seller. SHARES: A fair business has been done, chiefly in Press and Spinning Companies' Shares, at improved values.

REGIMENTAL APPOINTMENTS.—The Calcutta Gazette notifies that the G.O. numbered 66 of 1871 is cancelled, and the following substituted:—The C. in C. is pleased to rule that, whenever an appointment in a regiment of Bengal cavalry or infantry falls vacant temporarily, officiating promotions, except in the case of the gazetted commandant and 2nd in command, shall be regulated according to army rank of the officers serving with the corps, attached officers being considered as belonging to the regiment. Should the commanding officer consider that there are any special reasons why the senior officer in army rank should not be appointed to the temporary vacancy, he will submit the same for the orders of the C. in C.

COURTS OF CRIMINAL JUDICATURE.

The following preliminary report of a select committee was presented to the Council of the Governor general of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on Jan. 30:—

We, the undersigned, the members of the select committee of the Council of the Governor general of India for the purpose of making laws and regulations, to which the Bill for regulating the Procedure of the Courts of Criminal Judicature not established by Royal Charter was referred, have the honour to report that we have considered the Bill and the papers noted in the appendix, and have come to the following resolutions, which we now submit in the form of a preliminary report.

Resolution 1.—We are of opinion that the jurisdiction of magistrates and sessions judges who are justices of the peace might with advantage be extended in the case of European British subjects.

We recommend—

(1) That a full power magistrate, being a justice of the peace, and being, in the case of mofussil magistrates, an European British subject, should be empowered to try European British subjects for such offences as would be adequately punished by three months' imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000.

(2) That a sessions judge, being an European British subject, should be empowered to pass a sentence on European British subjects of one year or fine; and that, if the European British subject pleads guilty or accepts the sessions judge's jurisdiction, the Court may pass any sentence which is provided by law for the offence in question.

(3) That an European British subject, convicted by a justice of the peace or magistrate, should have a right of appeal, either to the Court of Session, or High Court, at his option.

(4) That in every case in which an European is in custody, he may apply to a High Court for a writ of habeas corpus, and the High Court hall thereupon examine the legality of his confinement and pass such order as it thinks fit.

Resolution 2.—We think that the provisions of the Code ought to be extended to proceedings in the Presidency towns, but not so as to vary the procedure now in force in trials by jury in the Presidency towns. We are not, however, as yet in a position to say whether this can be more conveniently done in the present Bill or in a separate measure.

Resolution 3.—We think that, if the jury system in the mofussil is to be maintained, the judge should, in cases in which he differs from the jury, have power to refer the case to the High Court, and that the High Court should be empowered to pass final order in the case.

REDUCTION OF THE ROYAL ARTILLERY IN INDIA.

The following circular has been published:—

The Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India in Council, with the concurrence of the Right Hon. the Secretary for War and his Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding in Chief, has decided upon a reduction of the present establishment of surplus officers of Royal Artillery in India.

With a view to carrying out such reduction, his Grace the Duke of Argyll has approved of the retirement from the service on the special annuities hereinafter set forth of 36 field officers and 28 captains and second captains of the late Indian Artilleries, to be taken from the three lists as nearly as possible in the following proportions:—Bengal, 18 field officers, 8 captains, and 5 second captains; Madras, 10 field officers, 6 captains, and 3 second captains; and Bombay, 8 field officers, 4 captains, and 2 second captains; not more than 24 of the field officers being regimental lieutenant colonels.

Field officers on the seconded list will be permitted to accept retirement on these terms, in addition to the above numbers.

In order that this reduction may be carried into effect with as little disadvantage as possible to the officers themselves, promotions will be made to the extent of one-half of the vacancies directly or indirectly occasioned by the above retirements, the remaining steps being absorbed by the reduction of officers to the new establishment.

General officers not in receipt of colonel's allowance will also be permitted to retire with the special annuities laid down in this circular, promotion being made in every alternate vacancy so caused.

The annuities which the Duke of Argyll proposes to offer to the officers of the late Indian Artilleries retiring under this scheme are as follows, and will be in addition to the pension to which they may be severally entitled under the Indian retiring regulations.

The aggregate retiring allowance of pension, good service pension, and annuity combined, in no case to exceed £1,000 a-year.

Special annuities will also be granted to the captains and second captains retiring under this arrangement who may be entitled to full-pay pensions under the regulations, such annuities being calculated according to the foregoing scale.

To officers of those grades who may not be entitled to any pension, special annuities, on the following scale, will be granted, viz.:—After fifteen years' service, £150 per annum, with an addition of £20 per annum for every additional year's service.

Officers of the late Indian Artilleries wishing to retire under this scheme will transmit their applications, if at home, direct to the Deputy Adjutant General, Royal Artillery, Horse Guards, as early as convenient, and if in India, to the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency in which they may be serving, with the least possible delay after the promulgation of this circular.

The officers to retire will be selected from those applying according to their regimental standing on their respective lists, in the proportions already laid down, but in the event of there not being a sufficient number of applicants on any one of the three lists to complete the specified number, each number will be made up from one or both of the other cadres, and promotion made accordingly.

As it is proposed that all the retirements accepted under this order, and the promotions consequent thereon, shall have effect from a date not later than the 1st of August, 1872, it is necessary that all applications should be received by the Deputy-Adjutant General of Artillery at the Horse-Guards by the 15th of July, 1872, at the latest, and the Commanders-in-Chief in the three Presidencies are requested to collect and transmit the applications of Officers serving in India accordingly.

Service for pension and annuity will be calculated to the 1st of August, 1872.

No application received after the 15th of July will be entertained under any circumstances.

BANQUET TO LORD NORTHBROOK.

Lord Northbrook, the new Viceroy of India, was entertained at a luncheon at the Southsea Assembly Rooms by the Mayor of Portsmouth, Mr. J. Baker, and the Mayoress, previous to his Lordship's departure for India. Covers were laid for upwards of 350 guests in the great hall of the Assembly Rooms. Among those present, in addition to Lord Northbrook and the Hon. Miss and Mr. Baring, were Admiral Sir G. Rodney Mundy, K.C.B., the Port Admiral and Naval Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth; Lieutenant General Lord Templeton, K.C.B., commanding the Southern military district, and Lady Templeton; Rear-Admiral W. H. Stewart, C.B., Superintendent of Portsmouth Dockyard, and Mrs. Stewart; Mr. Cowper-Temple, M.P., Mr. W. H. Stone, M.P., Mr. Bonham Carter, M.P., and Mrs. Carter; and Sir James D. H. Elphinstone, M.P., representing the county of Hampshire and the borough of Portsmouth in Parliament, the Vicar of Portsmouth, the Hon. Miss Hope, and the Mayors of Southampton and Brighton.

At the conclusion of the luncheon, the Mayor of Portsmouth proposed in due succession the toasts of "The Queen," "The Prince and Princess of Wales, and the remainder of the Royal Family," both of which were received with vigorous enthusiasm.

The next toast given by the Mayor was "The Army, Navy, and Reserve Forces."

Lord Templeton returned thanks for the toast on behalf of the regular Army, and Admiral Sir George Rodney Mundy for the Navy.

Colonel Richards, 2nd Hants Administrative Battalion of Artillery Volunteers, returned thanks briefly for the Reserve Forces.

Mr. Cowper-Temple, M.P. for South Hants, proposed "The Bishop, Clergy, and Ministers of all Denominations," which was replied to by the Vicar of Portsmouth.

The toast of the afternoon was proposed in eloquent terms by the Mayor of Portsmouth.

Lord Northbrook, in returning thanks for the manner in which his health and success as the future Viceroy of India had been proposed by the Mayor and received by the company, expressed in high eulogistic phrases his admiration for the character, public and private, of the late Viceroy of India, and referred to the great and well-deserved sympathy evoked everywhere, as well as in Great Britain and in India, for Lady Mayo under her deep affliction. Under existing circumstances he could not be expected to enter upon any lengthened exposition of the policy of England's Government in connection with India. The conditions of action were widely different for application in England and India. The responsibilities connected with the Government of India had not been accepted by himself without a proper regard for their importance. With the Duke of Argyll at the head of the Indian affairs in England, and other official advisers in this country, and with the able aid of the official authorities out in India, he hoped, however, to fulfil his duties as Viceroy of India with some, if not complete, satisfaction to himself and to the country. He felt it as a great encouragement upon the point of starting for India to have been received at Portsmouth in the hearty manner in which he had been that afternoon—the borough which his father, as Sir F. T. Baring, had represented in the House of Commons for upwards of forty years—years of service honestly and most conscientiously carried out for his constituents as an independent member of the House of Commons. It would be his endeavour to perform his duties as the Queen's representative in India as honestly and as conscientiously as his father had endeavoured to do his as the representative of Portsmouth. His reception that day, Lord Northbrook observed in concluding, by the people of Portsmouth would be inseparably connected with the memory of his father, and would be an incentive to his efforts in his future official life.

Mr. Stone, M.P., responding for the borough members, said the House of Commons deeply felt the responsibility cast upon it with respect to India. The tendency of political events was more and more to cast all authority, and, with it, responsibility, in a great measure upon Parliament, and particularly upon the Lower House, and there could be no greater political responsibility than the political problem they were called upon to solve in the administration of India. The Under Secretary of State for India said the other day that the present condition of the country was prosperous and satisfactory, but notwithstanding this, there must at all times be a tendency to make our position in India more and more difficult. This he (Mr. Stone) said with two facts in view:—First, the political tendency of our own country towards doing away with all superiority of class over class, and everything which savoured of arbitrary authority; and second, the rapidly increasing education of the very clever people of India. With these considerations in view, he felt that to carry on such a Government as our own, aristocratic and arbitrary, must, in the face of the rapidly increasing education, be a work of growing difficulty.

Mr. Cowper-Temple, M.P., responded for the county members

We had, he said, benefited India by our actions and reticence; we had never made it a field of party strife; and we most wisely declined to interfere with the private grievances of native princes. (Cheers.)

The Mayor of Southampton spoke on behalf of the Municipal Corporations numerously represented, and the Chairman's health was enthusiastically drunk.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

On Friday, March 15, the committee being engaged in inspecting the warehouses of Government stores, Belvedere-street, S.E., did not examine witnesses. The examination of stores was conducted, we believe, under the guidance of the Hon. Mr. Talbot, the director of the department, and his assistants. The working of the system of furnishing all kinds of provisions and materials for her Majesty's British forces in India was witnessed by, and explained to, the committee.

This mode of practical investigation shows the desire of the committee to obtain the most exact and accurate information possible on the expenditure of the Indian establishment. The inspection of the India warehouses was done at Mr. Talbot's own invitation, which the committee thought proper to accept at once.

Some questions were asked at one of the sittings of the Committee as to the military and medical funds taken over by the Crown in 1866. The exact replies were as subjoined:—It appeared that to a certain extent the accumulated capital of the funds at present lightens the burden of the State; but as the capital becomes exhausted the only income of the funds will consist of subscriptions, but the Government will make up the deficiencies. The inquiry on the same date into the guaranteed interest on the capital of Indian railway and other companies under their respective deeds of contract, including interest on debenture bonds, elicited the following information:—

The total capital of all Indian railways is £4,352,713. 6s. 1d. The inquiries of the committee were directed to the investigation whether the granting of the guaranteed interest to the several companies had proved injurious or otherwise to the Indian Exchequer; and it was ascertained that, although the system of Government according interest on railway capital had been the natural and proper course to pursue on the starting of Indian railway companies, it might for the future be better for the Imperial Government of India to make its own railways, and they had indeed done so by commencing the State railways now being constructed in India.

On Tuesday, the 19th inst., the examination of Mr. Thornton and Mr. Danvers on Indian railways was continued, and after Mr. Thornton had asseverated that he could not adopt Mr. Danvers's views or opinions on the benefit derivable from guaranteeing interest on the capital of railway companies, and moreover that he had objected to the principle of guarantees from the beginning, the examination of these two witnesses concluded.

Mr. L. R. Ashburner, collector and magistrate in Candeish, gave evidence as the manager of a model farm established during the last few years in Candeish. He was examined on the utility of that experiment, the witness also undergoing an examination on the best modes of agriculture for India, the most suitable kind of irrigation, and the best and cheapest manures.

The examination was extended to the nature of the pressure of the income-tax on the agricultural trading and European communities in Western India, especially in Candeish, Guzerat, &c. Mr. Ashburner said, with regard to the model farm, that it had proved expensive, and hitherto non-productive in some respects; nevertheless, it was a good practical means of inducing the native cultivators of the soil to adopt European systems of agriculture. On this farm selected seed of cotton had been sown with so much success that the produce had gone on increasing and improving in quality year after year. The witness explained that the difficulties the native agriculturists had to contend with were deficiency of fuel and manure, and the dearness of artificial irrigation. Schemes of scientific irrigation to divert the waters of rivers to the land requiring cultivation had been devised, and, whenever such works should be made, it would be of vast advantage to the cultivator; but if the Government of Bombay would encourage the cultivators in providing their own local means of irrigation by supporting the many local irrigation funds that existed, it would be a boon of a more direct and immediate benefit, as thus the natives would not have to wait an indefinite time for the making and completion of the greater schemes for providing river irrigation. [Witness undertook to produce an official paper, being a recent report, with balance-sheet, of the Candeish model farm.] On the income-tax question, the witness reviewed it by the light of his personal experience in its collection over a great portion of Western India. He had found that the income-tax was not felt as an unendurable burden by the people; but it was, nevertheless, difficult of collection. He (witness) proposed, in lieu of an income-tax over the Bombay Presidency, a property-tax which could be collected with greater certainty, and more easily. Recommended the imposition of a small tax or licence on tobacco, which was grown extensively over the whole acreage of Western India. In answer to the chairman, who reminded witness that there had been strong complaints and petitions sent to this country against the income-tax as imposed by Sir Richard Temple, he said that he had heard of the complaints, but had always considered the grievance greatly exaggerated. In reply to enquiries, the witness stated his views and opinions upon the taxation of India generally. He advocated a poll-tax, a tobacco-tax, and, best of all, a property-tax in lieu of an income tax. Answering an hon. member who designated a property-tax a "second land-tax," that would prove unpopular, Mr. Ashburner said he did not himself believe it would prove particularly objectionable, at any rate not in the districts of Western India, with which he was professionally connected.

On Friday, Mr. W. T. Thornton and Colonel Chesney were examined together on an item of about £19,000, being the annual charge for the support of the new College of Civil Engineers, Cooper's Hill. From Colonel Chesney's explanations, as Director of the College, there appeared to be nothing to object to as regarded the expenditure on this institution; and its utility as a nursery for Civil Engineers, destined for the public works of India, was proved by the College being able to constantly feed the public works with the kind of assistance required for developing the hydraulic and other resources of the country, including irrigation, railways, surveys, barracks, and other public buildings. But the exclusion (practically) of natives of India from the College was questioned, and the witness could not say that native youths should not participate as fully in the advantages of the College as Europeans, and also receive, after duly passing the College Test Examination, the same salary as the European pupils. But it was the fact that there are colleges in India where engineering is taught, but the native pupils when they passed were rated at one-fourth lower salaries than those granted through the diploma of the Cooper's Hill College of Engineers; and if native youths were to compete at the latter, still they would not be rated like Europeans. The witness could not agree with Mr. Fawcett that such an illiberal distinction—such a piece of exclusiveness—was calculated to act injuriously, in a political sense, on British interests in India. At the conclusion of Colonel Chesney's examination, Mr. Thornton was re-examined on the subject of the vast expenses, but unproductiveness, of the Ganges Canal.

Miscellaneous.

LORD NORTHBROOK.—Lord Northbrook was on Tuesday introduced to her Majesty's presence by the Marquis of Ripon, in the absence of the Secretary of State for India, owing to illness, and kissed hands on his appointment as Governor-General of India.

ORIENTAL BANK.—The annual meeting of the Oriental Bank is called for the 18th of April. After the transaction of the general business the meeting will be made special, to consider an application for an extension of the charters. The transfer-books will be closed from the 17th April to the 1st of May.

SIR G. POLLOCK.—(WHITEHALL, March 20.)—The Queen has been pleased to direct Letters Patent to be passed under the Great Seal granting the dignity of a baronet of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto Field-Marshal Sir George Pollock, of the Khyber Pass, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., Constable of the Tower of London, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten.

OUDE AND ROHLKUND RAILWAY.—The directors of the Oude and Rohilkund Railway Company have information that the Government of India have concluded their arrangements for the purchase of the Nulhatee Branch Railway, for £30,000, and will take over the line on April 1. As soon as the purchase money has been paid, and the accounts finally adjusted, the whole of the funds of the line will be distributed among the proprietors.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £600,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 20th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £398,000; to Bombay, £200,000; and to Madras, £2,000. The minimum price was fixed as before at 1s. 11d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras, at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 43 per cent.; on Bombay at that price about 71 per cent., and above in full. The average rate on Calcutta was 1s. 11¼d.; on Bombay 1s. 11¾d.; and on Madras, 1s. 11½d.

AGRA BANK.—In anticipation of the meeting to be held on March 27th, the report of the directors of the Agra Bank (Limited) has been issued. The net profit for the year 1871 amounted to £44,510, out of which a dividend at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum has already been paid for the six months ending June last. It is now proposed to pay a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum for the half-year ending December, leaving £5,173 to be carried forward. The results of the business, it is added, would have been more profitable if all the branches of the bank had, as was expected, contributed to the general revenue. Some of them, however, have failed to cover their working expenses, and at Bombay, Kurrachee, and Hong Kong, the deficiency, arising from expenditure exceeding the earnings, has been considerable. A distribution to the shareholders of the late Agra and Masterman's Bank, at the rate of £1. 16s. per share, will be made on and after the 2nd of April.

BULLION EXPORTS TO THE EAST.—According to a summary of the export of bullion to the East, compiled by Mr. F. M. Page, the total shipments during 1871 were £8 687,431, showing an increase, as compared with those of 1870, of £4,180,043. To Alexandria there was an increase of about three-quarters of a million; to Bombay an increase of about one million and a quarter; to Madras and Calcutta an increase of three-quarters of a million; to China and the Straits of Malacca an increase of about half a million; and to other places an increase of about three-quarters of a million.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, March 18.—THE LATE LORD MAYO.—Mr. OSBORNE: I wish to ask the First Lord of the Treasury a question of which I have not been able to give him notice, but which I hope he will be able to answer. It is whether the announcement contained in to-day's papers relative to the pension granted to the widow of the late Viceroy of India by the Secretary of State for India is correct, and, if so, whether the provision mentioned in the announcement is the only provision contemplated by the Government. (Hear, hear.)—Mr. GLADSTONE: The question of my hon. friend would perhaps have been more regularly put, as regards the first part of it, to my hon. friend the Under-Secretary for India, because I have not had official notice from the Council of India on the subject of their vote. My noble friend the Secretary of State is unfortunately laid up by severe indisposition; but I believe it is true that the vote mentioned in the papers of to-day has been taken by the Indian Government, and that no other question of provision has been raised. I may observe, if I am correct in my recollection—and my hon. friend the Under-Secretary will correct me if I am not—the provision made for the widow of the late Lord Elgin was one of £2,000 a year, one half of which was given from Imperial resources, on account of the fact that Lord Elgin discharged many diplomatic and colonial services for the Imperial Government of a character which entitled him to a pension. Comparing the gross amount of the provision in the case of Lord Elgin with that which is now made by the Indian Government, my hon. friend will observe that the latter provision is somewhat larger; £20,000 in gross being more than an equivalent for the second thousand a year. This is all the information I can give the House on the subject at present, in the absence of any communication with my noble friend the Secretary of State.

THE BRITISH ARMY AND THE REVENUES OF INDIA.—Mr. FAWCETT asked the Secretary for War whether he would state the number of officers, non-commissioned officers, and men included in the effective strength of the army now in England who were either wholly or partly maintained out of the revenues of India, and whether he was prepared to give an estimate of the amount which was thus contributed by India to the English Exchequer.—Mr. CARDWELL: I shall be ready to give any return my hon. friend may move for, showing in any form he wishes the number of officers, non-commissioned officers, and men on the Indian and on the British establishments respectively. The number of men in the depots of Indian regiments is shown in the estimates laid before Parliament; and their cost is defrayed from the votes of Parliament, and is to be reimbursed by a sum of money for each recruit agreed upon by the India and the War-offices upon a calculation approved by the Treasury. I do not think that more is contributed by India than the English Exchequer is fairly entitled to receive.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, WEDNESDAY, March 20.—OFFICERS OF THE LATE INDIAN ARMY.—Sir J. ELPHINSTONE asked the Under-Secretary for India, in reference to Clause 4, Regulation of the Forces Act, 1871, and to his reply to Colonel Sykes on the 13th of February, whether he would state to the House the reason why her Majesty's Government still withheld from officers of the late Indian Army "compensation in retirement equal to the sum they would have received, according to the custom of their regiments, from the junior officers of those regiments, had they retired therefrom prior to the day the Act comes or came into force."—Mr. GRANT DUFF: The claims of the officers of the late Indian Army to bonus compensation were disposed of by a despatch of Lord Cranborne's, dated August 8, 1866, embodying and carrying into effect the concessions made by him as Secretary of State in Council, which concessions had been, immediately before the despatch was laid on the table, announced by him in this House and extremely well received. That despatch of Lord Cranborne's was followed by more than one despatch from the next Secretary of State in Council, the right hon. gentleman the member for North Devon, explaining portions of it to the Government of India, and ruling certain disputed points in the interest of the officers. Her Majesty's present advisers, in dealing with the bonus question, have followed in every particular the same course as their predecessors, and they see no reason why a settlement made by their predecessors so long ago should be now disturbed because under different circumstances a different arrangement was made last year with the officers of a different army.

THE PERSIAN MISSION.—Mr. EASTWICK gave notice of his intention to postpone his motion with respect to the transfer of the Persian Mission from the 9th to the 16th of April.

REGIMENTAL PROMOTIONS.—Major ARBUTHNOT asked the Secretary of State for War how the official announcement "that promotion to the rank of captain is to be regimental" was to be reconciled with the Gazette of the 8th inst., in which three lieutenants of cavalry were promoted to troops in other regiments than their own; whether there were not cavalry officers in India senior, in the same rank, to the officers above referred to; whether in the two regiments of cavalry of the Line, in which such appointments were made, the selection of the officers promoted was due to the fact of those officers being in England, and the regiments in which the vacancies occurred being also in England; whether the manner in which the vacancies had been filled up was due to motives of economy; and, whether it was intended that promotion for the future was to be localised, officers in India being promoted to vacancies in India and officers in England to those in England.—Mr. CARDWELL: I think it will be agreed that when questions with regard to the selection are put, it is desirable to found them as far as possible upon correct information. The question is to be answered with reference to the Royal Warrants; and on referring to clause 11 of the Royal Warrant of the 30th October, 1871, it will be seen (under paragraph A) that a certain class of vacancies shall be filled by the senior qualified officers in the next lower rank in the regiment, "unless it is expedient that the vacancies be otherwise filled;" and under paragraph B, that another class of vacancies shall be filled by "a qualified officer of our Army, who shall be selected by our Commander-in-Chief, with the approval of our Secretary of State." It is to the latter class that the vacancies in cavalry regiments referred to belong, and they were filled accordingly. As to the second question, there are cavalry officers in India senior in the same rank to the officers referred to. The two lieutenants in India whom His Royal Highness considered to have the greatest claims were asked if they would accept promotion to troops at home. The one declined, the other expressed the hope that he might be promoted in India. As to question three, the answer is "Yes," consequent on the foregoing circumstance. Then, in reply to the fourth question of the hon. and gallant gentleman, I have to say that economy as regards the individuals has been considered, but not as regards the public; and, lastly, that no such arbitrary rule as is referred to in the last question is intended.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, March 21.—THE INDIAN ARMY.—Colonel BARTELOT asked the Under-Secretary for India whether there was any scheme under consideration to induce field officers of the Indian Army to retire; and if such a scheme was under consideration, whether it contemplated compensating those officers for the loss of colonel's allowances, to which they had always looked forward.—Mr. GRANT DUFF: In reply to the hon. and gallant gentleman's first question, I have to say that such a scheme is under consideration, but I regret that it is not in my power to answer the second question.

PETITIONS PRESENTED.—By Colonel ANNESLEY, from Indian officers; by Sir M. LOPES, from Major John James, Lieut.-Col. Thatcher, Lieutenant-Colonel Finlay, and Lieutenant-Colonel Houghton; by Sir J. ELPHINSTONE, from Major W. B. Preston, Bombay Staff Corps, Lieutenant-Colonel A. Fergusson, Major B. Urnston, Bengal Staff Corps, and Major W. W. Pierre, Bombay Staff Corps; and by Sir H. CAHOOT (4), from officers of the Indian Army.

NAUTICAL INCIDENTS.

The Lumley Castle (s.s.), Brown, of and from Shields, for Aden, with coal, and the Alalanta (s.), Matthews, of and for Liverpool, from Bombay, with a general cargo, have been in collision near Gibraltar; the former vessel is seriously damaged, and leaking badly, and discharging cargo into hulk; the latter is but slightly damaged. A telegram has since been received stating that, whilst the vessel was discharging coals, the water gained so much that she grounded in a bad position.

The Orchis (s.s.), of Liverpool, Crawford, from Calcutta to London, with a general cargo, got on shore, during thick weather on March 17, in Hope Cave, inside Bolt Tail, Plymouth. She has since got afloat, and proceeded for London without any apparent damage.

The Altcar, Harvey, from Liverpool to Bombay, with coals and coke, put into Queenstown on March 17 to restow cargo, being too light by the head.

Surveyors on the Ionia (s.s.), from Sunderland to Bombay, have reported the leak to be caused by defective rivets; the master expects the vessel to proceed without discharging.

The China, from Shields to Bombay, which arrived in the Downs on March 18, is detained, owing to her crew being refractory.

Information has been received stating that the ship Raby Castle, from Newcastle to Bombay, ashore at Pantellaria, stranded on the west end of that island during a thick fog on the night of March 11; she was lying badly on a rock forward. The fore compartment was nearly full of water, and it was feared that if she got off would not float; all hands were at work discharging coals into the sea and into boats alongside.

The Violet (s.s.), Watt, from Bombay to Liverpool, which arrived at Gibraltar on March 12, had had her boilers out of order; she proceeded on the 14th after repairing.

Twelve of the crew of the China, from Shields to Bombay, reported March 19 as detained in the Downs with crew refractory, were this day taken before the magistrates for refusing to proceed in the ship; the magistrates dismissed the case; a fresh crew has been supplied in lieu of those discharged.

The Marian Moore, Dixon, from Shields to Bombay, put into Plymouth March 21, the crew refusing to do duty.

The reported account of the Ionia (s.), from Shields to Bombay, having stranded at Ferrol, should have been telegraphed merely as a rumour, as the reporting of the stranding was doubtless erroneous.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

LADY MAYO'S PENSION.

The Times says as the nation does not grudge the high salaries of diplomatists or Governors, so we cannot recollect a single instance of late years where an adequate pension to the widow or family of an eminent public servant has elicited any remonstrance. What, then, is the Government afraid of? In the case of Lady Mayo it has only after much delay and hesitation determined on this niggardly proposal. Is it supposed that either in England or in India a liberal pension would create popular discontent? In India the people are accustomed to see immense revenues paid to the descendants of Native Princes to be spent in sloth, debauchery, and vice, and it is perfectly ridiculous to suppose that a sufficient annuity to the widow of a murdered Viceroy who was borne to the grave amid the mourning of millions would occur to any one of them as unreasonable. In England we know too well that this parsimony, which is now so conspicuous in high places, does not lead to any real economy. There is always a fight going on about some trumpery saving, yet—be the excuse what it may—we have the most expensive Government which has ever existed in England in time of peace, and a hundred thousand pounds appears to be piled on the expenditure for every hundred that is saved by the most grinding economy.

The Daily News says, according to the terms of the resolution it appears that, in consideration of the eminent services rendered by the late Earl of Mayo as Viceroy and Governor of India, of the munificence with which he maintained in that office the dignity of the Crown, and of his death by a deed of violence to which he was exposed in the discharge of his public duty, a life annuity of £1,000 is to be conferred on his widow, and a sum of £20,000 allotted for the benefit of the younger children; both to be paid out of the revenues of India. The life annuity is fixed at less than the salary of the Political Under-Secretary, and the capital sum for the benefit of the younger children at less than one year's salary of the Governor-General. It will probably be pleaded on behalf of this penurious generosity that, as the money is to be paid out of the revenues of India, it is wise and just on the part of the Secretary of State in Council to repress a disposition to indulge feelings of national gratitude at the expense of the poor Indian taxpayer. To this virtuous assumption the Indian tax-payer would naturally reply, that if the Council at Westminster could give balls and banquets at his expense, it might very well afford to interpret with decency and dignity his regret at the loss, and his respect for the memory, of a great and constant benefactor, in whom the sovereignty of the Queen had appeared as the personification of enlightenment and beneficence. To the intelligent native whose prejudices the Council at Westminster professes to consult, there will be something inexpressibly paltry in this thousand a year for the widow of a great public servant, and twenty thousand pounds for the younger children.

DETERRENT PUNISHMENTS.

The Echo observes that it has always been a mystery what to do with criminals who do not fear death. When that ultimate threat becomes ineffective, there is really no more to be said, except that one fanatic is thereby put out of the world, and a deterrent argument is offered to his fellows. The Englishman newspaper is concerned to find out what ought to be done with wretches like the assassins of Lord Mayo and of Justice Norman, and pleasantly suggests that they should be imprisoned for life and flogged once a week. It is just possible that if all the other would-be assassins in India could be caught and kept in cells overlooking the one inhabited by the man flogged once a week, the sight might prove very deterrent indeed. But with regard to the cruelty of such a punishment, we are glad it may be simply said that it would be impossible to find English judges, juries, governors of gaols, warders, or surgeons to carry it out. After six months of scourgings the victim would be the object of a universal frenzy of compassion. Only Inquisitors could do anything of the kind, and they did it on Gibbon's uncle for fourteen years—at the end of which time the poor fellow, a mere wreck of humanity, recanted, and was cast forth to die, heart-broken and in despair.

AN OBJECTIONABLE PRACTICE.—A highly objectionable practice, which we fear is still existing in the Mofussil, has been just put a stop to in the Trichinopoly District, where the collector, having been made aware that several of the native officials have been in the habit of keeping their cutcherries open on Sundays and Government holidays, has now strictly prohibited for the future this "highly reprehensible practice," adding that "if the work in any public servant's office is unusually heavy, he ought to devote a little more time each day to it, coming to office earlier, and so striving to prevent the accumulation of arrears." In an instance noted, "the tahsildar did not commence his office work until 2 P.M. on the Saturday, and to make up for lost time he opened his treasury on Sunday, and then falsified his accounts to conceal his misconduct." Major Law, of the D.P.W., had recently occasion to issue a similar prohibitory order in reference to his department.

SOUDOOLAND.—The sort of land called "Soudoo" land being, according to a recent report from the Collector of Bellary, frequently met with in that district, that officer has, in communication with the Commissioner of Scinde, where "Soudoo" lands are not uncommon, ascertained that all this kind of soil is capable of reclamation, the time, trouble, and expense being only in proportion to the extent and quality of salt prevailing in such soil. "When the salt is not excessive, the process is both speedy and simple—a crop is sown in spite of the saline appearance; it is of course only poor, but whatever is produced, excepting any heads of grain, which are cut off, is left on the ground, ploughed afterwards, and allowed to decompose. Water is then spread over the ground; this will give a film of good soil which is also ploughed in, and improvement is markedly manifest; the second crop being very much superior to the first, and so on until the soil is fit for any crop.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

Sudden changes, frequent fogs, and pervading dampness sorely impede the vital functions and conduce to ill-health. The remedy for such disorders lies in some purifying medicine, like these Pills, which is competent to grapple successfully with the mischief at its source, and stamp it out without fretting the nerves or weakening the system. Holloway's Pills extract from the blood all noxious matter, regulate the action of every disordered organ, stimulate the liver and kidneys, and relax the bowels. In curing chest complaints these Pills are remarkably effective, especially when aided by a free application of the Ointment. This double treatment will insure a certain, steady, and beneficial progress, and securely re-establish sound health.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, March 11; Agra and Madras, March 9; Calcutta, March 8.

THE papers received by this mail do not abound in very important news. On Tuesday, March 5, Lady Mayo started from Calcutta to meet the Glasgow at Bombay. Reaching that city on the morning of the 8th, her Ladyship embarked for Suez on the afternoon of the 11th. On the day of her departure from Calcutta a great public meeting was held in the Town Hall under the Hon Mr. Campbell, to express the popular sympathy with Lady Mayo, and to consider the best mode of perpetuating her husband's memory. Among the chief speakers were the Chairman himself, Mr. Justice Phear, Maulvi Abdul-Latif Khan, Lord Napier of Magdala, Mr. Bullen Smith, Rajah Kali Krishna, and Babu Digambar Mittra, all representative men. Each in turn bore his own testimony to some noble or pleasing trait in the late Viceroy's character and conduct. Mr. Campbell enlarged on his rare combination of personal and public qualities, on the remarkable union in his case of all that goes to make up "a sound mind in a sound body." Straightforward honesty and high administrative talent were perhaps his strongest points, but nearly as striking were the zeal he threw into his work and the exquisite tact and temper which marked his conduct of it. Mr. Campbell seems to have been deeply impressed with Lord Mayo's "honest enthusiasm for the good of the people," a quality in which he has learned to think that Irishmen peculiarly excel. Mr. Justice Phear dwelt mainly on the success of Lord Mayo's foreign policy; Lord Napier of Magdala on the tact with which he won the goodwill of the native princes; while the native speakers attested the horror with which all classes of their countrymen regarded the murder of so true a friend to India. The Maulvi especially disclaimed for the great bulk of his fellow-worshippers any kind of sympathy with the assassin whose deed had "crushed a populace and brought desolation over a whole empire."

ADDRESSES of condolence had poured in on Lady Mayo from all parts of the country. One of these was voted by the members of the Mohammedan Literary Society, who spoke of Lord Mayo as "the first Governor-General since the days of Warren Hastings who had taken a sincere and lively interest in the improvement of their condition." We commend this to Mr. W. M. Torrens. Another of the addresses was numerous signed by the ladies of Calcutta; and a third came from the merchants of Madras. In short, if the general sympathy could ever remove the sting of a great personal sorrow, Lord Mayo's widow must have found balm for her wound before she left India.

NOT least sincere perhaps in his display of grief at the death of Lord Mayo was the Amir of Kabul, who had put the whole city in mourning and publicly expressed his grief and anger in the strongest terms. Sir Salar Jung of Nipal has joined in the general chorus of regret and sympathy. From the Rajah of Patiala has come an offer of Rs. 15,000 for founding a scholarship in the Punjab University, in memory of the late Viceroy. Some comments appear in the papers on the omission of the Jhind Rajah to call on Mr. Davies during the latter's visit to Sirhind. The same Prince had also omitted to pay Lord Mayo's memory any of those special honours which were so conspicuous in the case of Nabha and Patiala.

IN Calcutta nothing had yet transpired with respect to the Budget, beyond a rumour that Sir R. Temple would be able to announce a surplus of a million. It was generally supposed that his budget-statement would have to be delivered before the arrival of the new Viceroy.

THAT the cost of the Loshai Expedition will be nothing like the sum suggested by the Spectator, is a piece of news for which the Friend of India is our authority. Instead of rising to three-quarters of a million, the probable amount is fixed at one quarter only. If that is all, the game may be considered worth the candles. But we should like to hear what Sir R. Temple will have to say on this point.

THE latest news from Generals Bourchier and Brownlow, as recorded in the Indian papers, has for the most part been forestalled by the telegraph. The last detachment of General Bourchier's force was to reach Tipai Mukh on the 7th March. Those troops which had already arrived there were being forwarded with all speed to Cachar. The arrivals included a large number of sick soldiers and coolies. The submission of the Northern Howlongs to General Brownlow had been duly ratified with peace-offerings and followed up by the surrender of all captives. Lalburah and several other chiefs had promised to meet Captain Lewin at Demagiri, an event to which he was looking forward with great confidence.

ONE of the minor obstacles which General Brownlow's force had to encounter on their line of march was "a perpendicular wall of rock, with a drop of about twenty feet." The only path to the bottom was "a ladder formed of a single stick, with rickety crosspieces roughly lashed on with a fastening of rotten cane." To get down this rude contrivance would have been an easy if tedious job for the men themselves, but for the baggage and accoutrements they had to carry about them. The tediousness of the process was aggravated by the need of lowering the guns and carriages with ropes down the side of the rock. What had become, we wonder, of the pioneers, who might in one hour have prevented the loss of several?

THE scenery about the village of Moorshlang, "perched on the brink of a precipice with a sheer fall of two thousand feet into the valley below," must have rewarded our troops for the fatigues of the march thither. The path which rose to a height of 6,750 feet, led them through "open forest glades strewn with acorns and bright with rhododendrons in full bloom." Officers and men decked their caps and turbans with the bright crimson flowers, and hung wreaths of the same round their mountings. The villagers took a friendly interest in the white strangers, pulling up their sleeves to see if their arms were really as white as their faces. At Champai, the goal of the Left Column, General Bouchier congratulated his troops on their good conduct under great difficulties and privations. A hearty cheer for the Queen was followed by the firing of Lalburah's stronghold, which disappeared in a volume of flame and smoke.

THE Pioneer learns from an informant at Bombay that the Indian Government have "severely condemned the unnecessary slaughter of helpless Kukas," after the outbreak in Sirhind.

MR. GIRDLESTONE has been appointed Resident at Katmandu.

The Indian Observer, a clever weekly, published in Calcutta, picks a large hole in the reasoning of those who look on the income-tax as the only way to "get at the banyas," or tradespeople. The banyas, in fact, are already got at in many ways. "Besides their proportion of the excise, customs, and opium, the wealthier inhabitants of the towns pay a great proportion of the revenue derived from bill stamps, court fees, and registration," none of which charges need be paid by the solvent landholder. The urban trader, moreover, pays nearly all the municipal cesses, the amount of which is steadily rising, and will rise yet higher, when the new system of decentralisation is still further carried out. The landholder, on the other hand, has found the value of his property increasing from various causes to such an extent, that land put up for sale can always command ready buyers at high prices. In thus arguing, the Observer does well to expose what has always seemed to us a great economical fallacy. Are not the trading classes "got at" already in various ways to an extent quite equal to their average means?

MR. LOGIN's experiments in cotton growing on the Egyptian plan seem thus far to have turned out surprisingly well. The chief features of his plan are thin sowing in regular ridges, deep and frequent ploughing, plenty of manure and water, and careful weeding. In one of his experimental fields near Ambala, which had been neither manured nor irrigated, but weeded six times, there are 3,000 plants ranging from two to eight feet high over a space of less than half an acre. These plants bore an average of 150 blossoms each. Of clean cotton the expected yield will average 260 lbs. an acre. Another field near Delhi, covering about three-fourths of an acre, was irrigated but not manured. The seeds were sown, as usual, two feet apart; the field was watered six times and weeded four. None of the plants was allowed to exceed five feet in height. Each plant gave off seven branches, each branch about fifteen twigs; and the ultimate yield of clean cotton is reckoned at five maunds, or 400 lbs. Two other fields were more or less injured by heavy floods, but even these were expected to yield clean cotton at the rate of 300 and 256 lbs. per acre respectively. In one of these fields the length of the staple exceeded by one third that of the cotton grown there the year before on the native plan. The native cultivators who carried out these experiments seem to have been highly satisfied with the results; and numbers of their countrymen who visited the fields declared they would try Mr. Login's plan the next season. If they do, and like results attend their labours, the new system will soon become popular, for the natives of India are quite alive to their own interests. Many of the zemindars however are still haunted with the fear of having their rents raised as soon as the new system is found to pay.

CALCUTTA appears to have lost no time in offering a handsome tribute to the services of the late Viceroy. According to a telegram of March 25, a sum of twenty thousand pounds has already been subscribed in that city towards erecting a monument to the memory of the lamented Earl.

ON March 30, according to the latest telegram from Calcutta, the bulk of the Loshai Expedition had got back to their homes.

IN the March number of Fraser's Magazine appeared a suggestive paper on "the New Hindoo Theism," from the pen of R. H. E., who may easily be identified with the author of several papers on "John's Indian Affairs," and also with the Mysore Planter whose "Experiences" we were glad to notice some time ago. The present article offers an interesting sketch of the Brahminist Reformer, Keshab Chandra Sen, and his doctrines, as he unfolded them in this country before the writer himself, who has many shrewd remarks to interpolate on the points which seem fairly open to criticism in the Reformer's teaching. He was struck for instance with the apparent sincerity of Chandra Sen's pretension to convey to his English hearers "the heartfelt thanks of one hundred and eighty millions of his countrymen for the great work they had commenced and carried out" in India. All this the audience seemed thoroughly to believe, but stranger still, the speaker "evidently believed it himself." His invectives against Caste and his rose-coloured views of India's undeveloped wealth also provoke expressions of dissent from this particular hearer, nor has he much faith in the moral reformation of Hindus, which the Reformer ascribed to our countrymen. But the chief significance of his paper lies in the discovery of a new political movement foreshadowed in the progress of the new Indian Theism. Arguing from like religious movements in the past, he holds that the Wahabis and Mohammedans of the present time "are as chaff compared to that spirit of which the new Theism is the living fruit." Whenever that spirit shall have turned its attention to State affairs, when the educated members of the new sect begin to enlighten their Hindu countrymen on the grievances they have been suffering under our rule, "there will arise a deep-seated feeling of universal hatred which will surely make itself felt." How we may yet avoid the worst perils of such an awakening, R. H. E. proposes to show in another paper. We shall be glad to hear further from him on a topic which, from this point of view, he has been the first to handle; however strongly we may be inclined to question the justice of conclusions drawn from what seem to us rather shadowy premises.

THE general feeling as to the inadequacy of the pension bestowed by the India Office on Lady Mayo expressed itself last Monday in the question asked by Lord Robert Gower, and the motion notified by Mr. Bernal Osborne. Both gentlemen, we are glad to see, content themselves with asking that the Imperial Treasury shall supplement the payments already promised by the Secretary of State for India. Mr. B. Osborne proclaims his conviction that the House of Commons will certainly make good any "further mark of favour" which the Queen may be pleased to bestow on "the widow and children of the late Earl of Mayo." Lord R. Gower's question regarding the Ministerial view of the matter was met by Mr. Lowe with a modest confession of his inability to answer it without a previous reference to his colleagues. It was a matter not of mere expenditure, but of principle, and as notice of the question had been given only on the Friday before, there had been no time, he said in effect, to take the opinion of his colleagues in that brief interval of three days. We should have thought that even questions of principle, where both question and principle were equally plain and simple, might be answered in less than three days, even with a Sunday making one of them. Mr. Lowe, however, begged to postpone his answer to a later occasion, that is, till after Easter, when he and his colleagues will have had time to consider what they mean to do. The chances are that more than one principle is concerned in the matter. Possibly he may object, on plausible grounds, to let the nation have any part in the pension offered to the widow of an Indian Viceroy who had previously held an important post under the English Government, and whose services to India were equally services to England. But we have a strong suspicion that the principle on which he will take his stand is really the good old principle of making India pay for everything that can possibly be laid to her account. The same useful friend in need who has bled so freely in honour of the Sultan of Turkey, for the benefit of the English Post-office, for the privilege of maintaining British troops in India, for the support of absentee English colonels nominally commanding Indian regiments, will no doubt be strongly urged to double the pension already granted to Lady Mayo out of Indian revenues. If this be the principle which the Chancellor of the Exchequer has resolved to illustrate, we can only hope that the Duke of Argyll will for once succeed in thwarting his kind intentions.

THERE was one point in Mr. Lowe's Budget statement which may have some special interest for some of our countrymen in Southern India. The coffee-planters of Mysore have lately had to keep up a losing struggle with the adverse circumstances that barred the way to an early consummation of their previous hopes. The ravages of the Borer insect came to crown the list of untoward influences that worked against them. Mr. Lowe's new Budget however offers a fair chance of escape from some at least of their difficulties. The tax on raw coffee is to be reduced one-half, from 28s. to 14s. a hundred-weight, and that on roasted or ground coffee from 4d. to 2d. a pound. So material a reduction in the market price of a stimulant so wholesome, refreshing, and comparatively cheap, ought, one thinks, to give it a new start in the rivalry with other beverages. Hitherto, as Mr. Lowe observed, the history of coffee has been a melancholy one. Twenty-seven years ago, in 1855, the consumption of coffee in England amounted to 1·3 lb. a head, not much lower than the average consumption of tea at the same time. While the latter however can now boast an average consumption of four times that amount per man, the consumption of coffee has not advanced by ever so small a fraction. Three years ago it had even declined to less than a pound a head. This state of things must have been largely owing to the greater favour enjoyed by tea in the process of fiscal reduction. Whether coffee will ever become quite as popular a drink for the millions as its Chinese rival, may be open to doubt; but we may safely regard the immediate loss to the revenue from the lowered duty as certain to be made good ere long by the increased consumption of the cheaper article. May we also venture to hope that the stuff now sold as coffee in most places of popular resort, will henceforth taste a little less like warm ditch-water with a dash of London milk?

It has at length been decided that officers of the old Indian Artillery and new Line Regiments who come home on sick leave, but are compelled through continued ill-health to go on temporary half pay, shall still be considered on sick leave, so far as their connection with the Madras Military Fund is concerned, until five years after the date of their departure from India shall have elapsed. During that time they will continue to receive all those personal benefits, such as income-allowance for themselves and their families, to which they were entitled by the rules of the Fund, and the payment of donations due on account of promotion will in the meanwhile be suspended.

FROM a telegram forwarded by the Berlin Correspondent of the Times, it appears that the Khan of Khiva is arming against an expected attack by the Russians. He has summoned to his standard all the able-bodied men in his dominions. An attempt has also been made, it seems, to "drain the western canal of the Amu (or Oxus), or at least to render its water undrinkable." As Khiva itself depends largely upon these canals for the irrigation of its fields and the use of its inhabitants, we are puzzled to know exactly what this means. The Russian troops, which had arrived at Krasnovodsk on the Caspian, are said to have been joined by Atamurat, Khan of a Turkoman tribe. On the other hand it is reported from St. Petersburg that the Khan of Khiva has despatched an envoy with conciliatory messages to the Tzar of Russia. From these reports, which seem at first sight to conflict with each other, it may at least be inferred that Khiva has some cause for alarm at Russian movements on her frontier.

THE EUROPEAN VAGRANCY ACT.—In the exercise of the power vested in him by the last Clause of Sec. 2 of the European Vagrancy Act, 1869, H.E. the Acting governor gen. in council is pleased to extend secs. 4 to 16 (both inclusive), 19, 20, 24, and 29 of the said Act to the Punjab, as well as to the dominions of the Princes and States in alliance with H.M., situated within the limits of that Province, with effect from the date of the republication of this notification in the local Gazette of the Government of the Punjab.

THE INDIAN UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.

THE recent correspondence between the India Office and the Indian Government touching the future of the Uncovenanted Services indicates a serious difference of opinion between the parties corresponding on other questions than that of furlough pay alone. In their despatch of October, 1870, the Indian Government agree with the Duke of Argyll as to the general expediency of reserving for the Covenanted Services all such posts as the natives of India may not yet be qualified to fill. With due regard to the claims of their Uncovenanted servants, they are quite willing to carry out a rule from which in fact they have never departed without just cause. One of the tables appended to their despatch shows that only 102 appointments usually filled by the Covenanted Services are now held by Uncovenanted Englishmen, against 136 held by natives. At the same time they record their deliberate protest against the sweeping exclusion of Englishmen, who have not passed into their service through the regular channels, from offices which Covenanted servants have never filled and native Indians are practically unfit to fill. For many or most of these offices the natives lack more or less of the "professional skill, strength, and endurance" to be found among Europeans; nor would it be wise to make over to members of the Civil Service or the Staff Corps appointments which demand "special professional acquirements," even if the pay of these appointments were high enough to tempt the services of such men.

This being so, the Indian Government again plead for the extension to all Uncovenanted Europeans of the liberal furlough rules already sanctioned with regard to officers of the Education Department who have been appointed from England. They point out that some of the ablest officers in that very Department were not appointed direct from England, and they demur strongly to the "invidious process" of placing these and their fellows in other departments on a special list, for the purpose of receiving, as a favour, that liberal treatment which should rather be looked upon as their right. They can conceive no ground for making any such distinction "between two gentlemen, not natives of India, of equal rank or holding the same office" in their service. Whatever his Grace may rule with regard to the future, they hold it most unfair to place an officer appointed by themselves in a less favourable position than "officers not more than his equals, and perhaps his inferiors, only because they have been appointed in England." There must, they affirm, be many exceptions to the rule that Europeans desiring service in India should be engaged in this country. "There can be no good ground why barristers, engineers, and other professional or scientific men, should be held disqualified, or partially disqualified, for service in India, merely because they are possessed of the special advantage of Indian experience." To be obliged to refer home for his Grace's sanction the separate case of every such applicant for the benefit of the new furlough rules, would hardly "be in keeping with the status of the Government of India."

Proceeding to the question of furlough pay, the Indian Government once more urge the injustice of fixing a lower outside limit for the Uncovenanted than the thousand a year already fixed for the Civil and Military Services. Even of those uncovenanted officers who would be entitled to more than £800 a-year on furlough, the number will never much exceed fifty, and of these only six or eight would be taking their furlough at one time. What then would be the advantage of maintaining a distinction in this respect, at once invidious and seemingly unfair, between "officers doing perhaps the same duty, and at any rate receiving the same salaries, merely because they belong to different classes?" An uncovenanted officer who has risen to the highest grades of his service must have been distinguished for special ability in his own line. It can hardly therefore be right or expedient to put him off with lower rates of furlough-pay than his covenanted rival whose official rank and salary may be no higher than his own.

With regard to the alleged unfairness of having one set of furlough rules for Europeans and another for natives, the Indian Government point out with equal justice, that rules which may be very liberal for natives of India are "totally unsuited for natives of other countries." The necessity for making a distinction between the two classes of servants appears to us indeed so glaringly self-evident, that the attempt to demonstrate it would be sheer waste of time. No greater injustice could be inflicted on our countrymen in India than the framing of rules which utterly ignored the manifest differences between an officer serving in his own country and an officer serving in a foreign land and an uncongenial climate, thousands of miles away from his own kith and kin. The idea of sacrificing the interests of the latter class and the efficiency of the public service to the demands of a hard mathematical uniformity, seems to us so preposterous, that we can only look upon its outward embodiment in the India-office proposals as a convenient cloak for the final elimination of the uncovenanted European from the service of the Indian Government. For that is the evident moral of the Duke of Argyll's renewed injunctions, as conveyed in his despatch of last December, against appointing Europeans to any office which can be fitly held by a native.

"It is obviously desirable," writes his Grace, "that an increasing proportion of Uncovenanted Officers should be natives of India, and also that the principle which has been hitherto so eminently successful in operation should be, as far as possible, maintained of vesting the first appointment of such Europeans as may be destined for the higher branches of the service, whether Covenanted or Uncovenanted, in the authorities in England, leaving all promotions to be made by the authorities in India." About the former of these two propositions few persons are likely to dissent from his Grace. It is only right that the native Indians should be encouraged to take office under their English masters. At present there appear to be only fifteen Natives in all British India holding appointments worth more than Rs. 1,000 a-month, and only three whose salaries range from Rs. 1,100 to Rs. 1,600 a-month. Only five natives draw salaries of 800 and 900 rupees a-month; while all our boasted regard for native feeling has hitherto resulted in appointing one Native Judge to the High Court of Bengal, at a salary of Rs. 4,166 a-month. More than three-fourths of the appointments held by native Indians are held at a monthly salary ranging from one hundred to three hundred rupees. If our deeds are ever to keep pace with our words, it is surely time to follow up our schemes of national education in India by opening out new fields of advancement in the public service to native energy and native talent. But justice to the native need not be carried out by means of sheer injustice to those of our countrymen who have entered the public service by other inlets than Westminster or Woolwich. Whether the principle of investing all first appointments of Europeans to India in the home authorities be practically sound or no, many people, we think, will demur to the rule laid down at the India Office, that "all Europeans appointed in India to offices which could be fitly held by natives should receive no greater advantages of any kind, furlough of course included, than would be enjoyed by natives holding such posts or offices." This may indeed be nothing more than a warning to the Indian Government against any attempt to favour their own countrymen at the expense of natives equally fit for particular kinds of work; and in truth his Grace avows in the same breath his willingness to grant "reasonable concessions to actual incumbents." But who is to decide whether a particular duty should be discharged by a native or an European? May not the local Governments be trusted with full discretion upon such a point of comparative detail as this? The question of fitness for holding office must generally be decided by local conditions best known to the local authorities. A Bengallee who may be fit to hold office under Mr. Campbell might for various reasons be unfit to hold a similar office under Sir W. Muir or Mr. Davies. If the local Governments can be trusted to choose the right kind of native for some Uncovenanted post, they must surely be competent to choose the right kind of European also; and in these days the latter may frequently be obtained on the spot, without recourse to the uncertain, costly, and roundabout process of a certified importation from England. It cannot be wise or fair to tie the hands of the Indian Governments on those very matters which fall most naturally within their province.

Correspondence.

ANOTHER CASE OF WIFE DESERTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—It is some two years since you drew attention in the pages of this journal to the lamentable consequences which too often result from matrimonial connections formed between English women and Asiatic strangers who are paying a fleeting visit to this country.

You remarked, and most truly, that in the generality of these cases, the one, and that the weaker party to the contract, engaged in it whilst labouring under deplorable ignorance of its real nature, inasmuch as legalised polygamy, which it practically involves, is happily an unknown institution here, and that therefore—putting aside the obvious objections which present themselves to the marriage of two individuals, so diametrically opposed to each other in habits and customs as a Pagan or Mahomedan Asiatic and a Christian inhabitant of these Islands—a positive cause of dissatisfaction existed on the grave grounds of unavoidable misapprehension on the one side.

And you pointed these remarks by referring to a case which had just then occurred. "A Mahomedan native of Oudh, who was in receipt of a large pension from Government, during a short visit to England, married a very respectable English-woman, and almost immediately afterwards coolly informing her that he had half-a-dozen more wives still living in India, returned to that country, leaving her penniless and destitute behind him." Owing partly, Sir, I firmly believe to the publicity which you gave to this case, and to the force of your leading article before alluded to, his Grace the Duke of Argyll was pleased to authorise the sum of £200 per annum being paid to the unfortunate person in question out of the pension of her husband. She was thus saved from starvation, or a life of protracted misery—either contingency the simple result of her ill-considered conduct in allying herself with an alien of whom she knew nothing, and against whose acts—were it not for the circumstances connected with the pension—there was absolutely no legal remedy.

I have now to ask your attention, and that of your readers, to a somewhat similar case, in the hope that some favourable result may ensue from its ventilation in your columns.

On the 16th of August, 1869, a Persian gentleman named Mirza Said Khan (a younger brother of one Ghyas Khan, who enjoys a pension of a considerable amount from our Government on account of services rendered by his father during the Afghan war, on the understanding that it is to be divided amongst certain members of his family, of whom Mirza Said Khan is one), married in London an Englishwoman of good character and respectable antecedents. Not long afterwards he left England for Persia, promising to remit money for her maintenance. This however he has totally failed to do, and consequently she and her child are now reduced to the greatest distress.

An application on the subject has already been made to the Persian Ambassador in London, who, in consequence of the status of Mirza Said Khan as a pensioner of the British Government, which, it is alleged, interferes with civil procedure in Persia, declares himself unable to interfere, and to the Foreign Office, at whose request her Majesty's Minister at Teheran has inquired into the case, and reports that Mirza Said Khan has lately married a third wife, but pleads poverty as a reason for omitting to assist his English one, and that he (her Majesty's minister) does not see what further steps can be taken in the matter.

Thus it would appear that the Englishwoman in question—having vainly sought for redress on every side—must fall back upon the hard conviction that the peculiar technicalities of the position in which she finds herself preclude her from obtaining it, either through the intervention of the English or Persian law courts. But her equitable right to it remains as strong as ever, and I can see no possible reason why a portion of the pension which her husband receives should not be deducted by the British authorities, and made over to her. At all events, her example ought to prove another salutary warning to those foolish women who, enamoured with the tawdry dress and specious address of these Eastern strangers, feel inclined, like her, recklessly to throw themselves away.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

THE ANDAMAN CONVICTS.

The Madras Times holds that the Andamans as an Indian penal settlement is to our mind a mistake. The elements of a great catastrophe are evidently rife there, and when we consider the alarming disproportion in numerical strength between the convicts and their guards, we can only experience surprise that such a catastrophe has not occurred before now. The expense of the settlement is also great, and its profits nil; while as a mere prison it is hardly equal to its purposes since we constantly hear of the prisoners managing to escape from it. How it comes to pass that India needs a penal settlement beyond the sea in these latter days, when she never needed one before and in the earlier days of our Raj, is a question that is easier asked than answered. We presume that it is one of the luxuries or extravagancies that have followed on our prosperity; and yet we must not forget that in England transportation is becoming a folly of the past; and most deservedly so. At home our convicts are now better employed in constructing docks and other works of public utility than in wasting their lives and labour in distant island prisons; but the English plan of utilising convict labour, although fully recognised as good at home, seems not as yet to have penetrated to a country where it might be more easily carried out even than in England. We have speculative public works and to spare in India, upon which convict labour might be most advantageously employed, nor can we perceive any more inconvenience or danger in working convicts in gangs and under guards upon the continent of India than upon the Andaman Islands or other places beyond the sea. It is a common complaint that our whole convict system is faulty to a degree, and needlessly expensive—that our rogues are better cared for than our honest men—and there is much truth in the complaint. In no respect is this assertion more justifiable than with reference to the penal settlement on the Andamans where we maintain at no little risk and danger a colony of cut-throats, a portion of whom labour for naught, a portion only for their own pecuniary advantage.

OFFICERS' PENSIONS.

The Madras Times observes that the memorial now in preparation by Indian officers requesting an increase of pension, on the grounds that prices have greatly increased since the old scale was concocted, has nothing to do with any previous claims submitted to the India Office, and the Duke of Argyll may fairly take this latest petition into favourable consideration without a thought that the official etiquette of himself or his predecessors could be outraged by conceding its demands. The present rate of pension is in truth absurd when compared with the emoluments an Indian officer enjoys when upon the active list. The Indian Army has numbers of officers in military and civil employ drawing £1,000 a-year and upwards in this country, who, if they retired from the service, would be at once reduced to incomes of from £190 to £290 a-year, and with no possible progressive increase in the future. No wonder, then, that retirement is at a deadlock—that every officer holds on to the country, and his Indian pay with the grasp of despair, and whether he has adequate employment for his rank or no employment whatever? The public regards aghast the monstrous figures of the military estimates, but it cannot reasonably expect officers to starve upon their pensions when they can grow fat upon their Indian pay. Increase the pensions, and, perhaps, also the extent and opportunities of furlough, and the estimates will be lowered to a very appreciable degree, if we mistake not. As regards the latter, furlough, like pension, has fallen into the hands of the bunglers. A Northern contemporary lately informed us that furloughs for field officers could no longer be granted in the Bengal Presidency, the recognised number of absentees being complete, and yet every station in that presidency is overrun with "general duty officers"—a pretty commentary upon the wisdom of those who look after the public exchequer. In the course of another month or so Sir Richard Temple will present us with his annual bantling in the shape of a budget, and we shall read the usual formulae about the great expenses of our army, and the necessity of finding taxation to provide for it. We shall be told, as usual, that our army was never in a better state of efficiency than at present, and the usual generalities will be dealt with; but it remains with the public of India whether they will accept these statements of routine as correct or not. We trust it may remonstrate at the impositions placed upon it, and delay no longer in seeking both redress and reform from Parliament in the matter of a grievance that is general. It is not that the public money is fairly expended upon a strong military garrison of India. If such was the case we should have no grounds for complaint. It is that taxation is levied, and its profits wasted upon an army of officers rather than of men.

THE SETTLEMENT DEPARTMENT.—A PROFESSION.

The Indian Economist asks if it has never occurred to Government, as the great landlord of India, that it is very desirable that it should have a body of servants in its employ acquainted with scientific agriculture? Now that we have made up our minds that the State shall not trifle away the interests of the Commonwealth in the soil, is it not time that we enlisted in our service a body of gentlemen possessing a practical knowledge of the best and most profitable modes of cultivating that soil? The neglect of our great estate has surely lasted long enough, and it is time that something were done for the improvement of its husbandry. We trust the time has come when Government recognises the fact that the Settlement officers of the country are not a mere provisional body engaged in temporary service, but that they form the nucleus of what must be a great and permanent and distinct branch of the Administration. We are not surprised that appointments to the Settlement department should be the ambition of the great majority of the younger servants of Government, but we are surprised that so little attempt has yet been made to give these gentlemen the technical education which it seems to us every Settlement officer ought to possess. The reports of the department constitute a rich and unique literature, of which any people might be proud. But these reports, able as they are, show clearly how susceptible the whole system of our land revenue management is of improvement. Thus many of the officers of the department are themselves painfully conscious of the disadvantage they are under in these Settlement proceedings from having no practical acquaintance with agriculture. Settlement work is not yet made sufficiently a profession, and we would very earnestly suggest to Government the propriety of requiring its officers to go through a course of scientific agriculture in one of our agricultural schools at home, and to make a thorough acquaintance with one or two of the best writers on political economy as it affects production. We are but just beginning to discern what we have to do in India. The chief thing of all is the administration of the land, and were Government to require all the younger members of the Settlement Department to go through a course of agriculture in one of the European schools, giving them the necessary two or three years' leave for the purpose, the country would possess in the course of a few years a body of administrators, such as was never yet seen in the world. With such a staff the Agricultural Department would revolutionise the husbandry of the whole country, and double its production, we believe, within a very few years. The Settlement Departments of the country should be made, we say, a permanent and scientific body. They are characterised already by an amount of administrative talent that has never before been seen in the world, and were we to complete the education of these gentlemen by making them pass through a course of agriculture at the great European schools, we should, we believe, take the most direct course open to us to improve the husbandry of India. They want educating with closer reference to their employment, and should be taught to consider Settlement work as a profession to which their whole mind should be given. As a rule, it is so given even now, from the fascination which the work seems to possess, and if we will but give to these young officers a technical acquaintance with agriculture, we shall find in them a staff of administrators who will do all that men can do to stimulate the enterprise of the people, and develop the latent powers of the soil.

BREECHLOADERS FOR THE NATIVE TROOPS.

The Madras Athenæum remarks that in the old days the ball cartridge was a somewhat easy fit in the barrel. The soldier when he loaded bit off the end of the paper, shook out the powder and sent the ball down after it in its original position; three strokes with the ramrod sent it well home; the priming, whether on nipple or in pan, took just the same time as it does now, but the actual loading took much less. Observe how the sepoy loads now; he twists off the end of the cartridge with his fingers, which takes twice as long as the biting; he shakes down the powder as before, next he inserts the cartridge and pushes the bullet into the barrel with the paper uppermost, and very often has to wait yet longer to skin the paper off the bullet, which is made a tolerably tight fit for the barrel, and which absolutely refuses to go in, paper and all, after the barrel has got hot or foul! We have seen men after firing a few rounds fiddling with their cartridges for more than a minute before they could get them in, and then hammering away like mad with the ramrod to force them home, and very often failing to do so and having to fall to the rear. Moreover, in inverting the cartridge a nervous or butter-fingered fellow often lets it drop, and it is probable that on actual service a large percentage of the discharges would be blank, the powder shaken down, the bullet dropped or thrown away, if it seemed inclined to be sticky. With perfectly clean muskets and equal conditions on both sides the saving of time in favour of the old system is as twelve to fifteen. But in the course of firing twenty rounds it would come to be more like twelve to twenty-four. And the tightness of the present cartridge, which is the main cause of the delay, has no compensating advantages worth mentioning. It will indeed give a slightly improved accuracy for the first shot, but when the barrel gets foul and the bullet has to be skinned or hammered out of all shape, that superiority is lost. And the slowness gets worse and worse and is unmitigated by any compensation. The muzzle-loading Enfield will give a great advantage as to range, but for slowness of loading it is as bad as the present piece. The breech-loader is the only means of securing that rapidity of fire which the latest editions of all military exercises assume as a sine qua non. Moreover, as a collateral recommendation, we may observe that anybody can make ammunition for Enfields, whereas cartridges for breech-loaders can only be made by regularly trained establishments suitably furnished with plant. While a Government retains the manufacture and storage of such cartridges in its own hands, breech-loaders in the hands of its servants will be nearly as powerless for mischief as they would be effective for good service, for they could only be used for mischievous purposes so long as the slender stock of expense ammunition lasted, and their facility of rapid fire, a temptation irresistible by private soldiers when not controlled by their officers, would insure the expenditure of that slender stock within a very short time, and probably at very long ranges.

MARY WINCHESTER.—Mary Winchester, the little girl who was so long a captive with the Loshais, left Calcutta on the 4th March, in the s.s. City of Cambridge to be made over to her relations on the arrival of the vessel in London. The little lady, who is seven years old, was treated with great kindness by her savage friends, who cried bitterly at parting from her.

THE OLD BANK OF BOMBAY.—Mr. George Gregory has given notice of his intention to bring before the House of Commons the circumstances attending the failure of the Old Bank of Bombay, and, in anticipation of this motion on the 12th of April, the committee of shareholders have issued a statement of their case for the use of members of Parliament. It contains a recapitulation of all the facts that led up to the disaster, as brought out in the evidence taken before the commission of enquiry, and cites the various grounds on which the shareholders claim compensation from the Indian Government. Among the points named as proving the liability of the Government are its laches in passing the Act of 1863; its neglect in not having used its power to enforce an audit of the accounts; the permission it gave the directors to advance on promissory notes, whereby the shareholders sustained a loss of £801,073; the loss of £247,369, by the failure of Premchand; the illegal opening of a branch bank in Bombay; the last point being the Government's "general blindness to the signs of the times," its "acceptance of false returns and statements," and generally its "indifference, neglect, and supineness." The case admits that the shareholders have no legal remedy, but concludes by saying that they throw themselves on the intelligent, liberal consideration of Parliament, and its sense of fair dealing and justice.

MR. LOGIN'S EXPERIMENTS WITH COTTON.

Mr. Login's report on cotton cultivation in the Punjab, on the Egyptian system, should convince the most sceptical of the desirability of at once making every effort to induce the adoption of that system in preference to the native one in all parts of India where cotton cultivation is carried on. Mr. Login's statements are very clear. He has brought facts and figures together in such a way as utterly to dispel any misgivings that might be entertained as to the advantages of the system, and also to reduce to a minimum the weight of any arguments urged on the contrary side.

Mr. Login gives the details of the cultivation and produce of four experimental cotton fields, averaging in extent from a quarter to three-quarters of an acre approximately, and lying at intervals along the road between Umballa and Delhi, a distance of 120 miles. The experiments seem to have been very fair, having been conducted under a full share of the misfortunes of floods, shade, stray cattle, and squirrels, which last, with parrots, appear to have destroyed a large number of the plants on one of the fields.

The prominent features in the new system of cultivation, as compared with the native system, are—1st, thin sowing, so that the plants can draw the necessary nourishment from the soil; and 2nd, careful cultivation, in the form of plentiful ploughing, manuring, watering (when needed), and weeding. With reference to the manuring, it must be noted that the first and largest field was not manured, but irrigated; and that the fourth field was neither manured nor irrigated. This one had been under grass for ten years. It might naturally be supposed that this steady attention to the fields would entail serious cost, but Mr. Login shows that the expense was trifling, and not worthy of account at all when compared with the enormous profit.

No. 1...	...	3-4th acre	533 lbs. per acre, of clean cotton.
No. 2...	...	2-7th "	300 " "
No. 3...	...	5-16th "	256 " "
No. 4...	...	9-20th "	260 " "

In describing the cultivation of the first field, Mr. Login has gone into the minutest details, and estimates (not too sanguinely) that there will be a clear profit of 350 per cent. on the cost of labour and the seed.

These results cease to appear astonishing when we compare the two systems of cotton cultivation, and reflect that the natives find it profitable to give up, to a considerable extent, the cultivation of grain for that of cotton on their own system. All those who have seen Indian cotton-fields know that natives make little or no difference between the sowing of cotton and the sowing of jowaree. A cotton-field ripe for picking might be easily mistaken for a gram field—plants from one to two feet high, a few inches apart, and bearing from twelve to twenty pods each. But Mr. Login describes fine branching shrubs, pruned down to a height of five feet, growing from two to three feet apart, and with an average of 150 blossoms each; one plant, if plants they can be called, having no fewer than 370 blossoms, and another 275. It will now appear no more than what should be expected, that the fibre of Mr. Login's cotton exceeded by one-third that obtained on the native plan. It remains to be added that Mr. Login gives his observations on some additional experiments, conspicuously a venture by a zemindar; and the results are much less satisfactory than might have been reasonably laid account with, considering the great disadvantages attending these small operations. We give two quotations from the report—

Surprising as these figures may appear, yet they are not more so than seeing the field itself, and prove to my mind, if I ever had any doubts, that India can and will compete with the world in the produce of this great staple of industry. Should the ultimate result be that the Indian cultivators, by the introduction of this Egyptian system, can only produce half this average, what a boon it will be both to India and England.—Indian Economist.

THE ANDAMAN ISLANDS.

(From the Daily Examiner.)

SIR,—People seem just this moment to have discovered that the system of management followed at the convict settlement at Port Blair is not as it ought to be. Yet, since 1867, there should have been enough examples to have taught the lesson which the late deplorable event alone seems to have done. It may be safely said that the settlement has been neither more nor less than an imposition upon the Indian tax-payer pecuniarily, and worse than a farce when considered in the light of a prison or a convict colony. From its commencement it has been ill-managed; under whatever Superintendent, it has failed to produce itself at all commensurate with its cost; and latterly, since the Andamans have been added, the expenditure has been so enormous that I have reasons for believing Government attention is about to be directed towards its reduction, and also to the introduction of a different system of management; but great evils have been done already by that hitherto followed, and it has now resulted in an occurrence which, I suppose, will give the coup de grace to it.

The expenditure upon the settlement has, I have said, been enormous. To establish a convict settlement at such a place must, of course, have been expected to cost a deal of money, but there was not the slightest occasion for its having cost so much. The labour required should have been comparatively cheap; the fact is, that it has been the most expensive item in the account. Materials for building should not have cost much, seeing that the island produces all that is wanted, and of the best quality; yet, what with bad workmanship and indifferent materials, public works on Ross Island are reported shaky, and the newly-built castellated barracks for the European infantry—so far as they were then finished—when I was there in 1868, were so rickety that the soldiers of the 24th did not like the idea of living in them. The labour of the convicts has not been at all utilised as it should have been, otherwise after an existence of ten years the settlement should not have been, as it is now, nothing but a sponge to absorb money. The expenditure on the commissariat has been frightful. In April or May, 1868, the Chief Commissioner of Burmah sent his secretary (then Major Davies) from Rangoon to make inquiries into the matter, and it was broadly reported, and the statement even found its way into the public prints, that there was a large deficiency in these accounts, and the chief clerk to the superintendent was arrested on some charge connected with the matter, brought down to Rangoon, and the matter dropped. About that time commissariat mutton, sent from Calcutta at an aggregate expense of one rupee four annas per pound, could be purchased at Port Blair for four annas, and none obtainable at all at Rangoon; draught beer could be purchased for three annas per quart at the Commissariat, and Government of course had to make good the deficiency, amounting, it was said, to some lakh and a quarter. Colonel Ford, the Superintendent, then went home on leave, and was succeeded by Colonel Man, from Penang. Under the energy and lavish expenditure of the gallant Colonel, the settlement went ahead like wildfire, the Andamans were annexed, and the convicts, as her Majesty's guests should do of course, enjoyed happy times of it. They lived in clover, were married, and given in marriage; had a liberal allowance of liquor, equal to that a man-o'-war's man receives, and more than what a soldier gets, as the latter is allowed none, enlivened the proceedings of their Calypso by an occasional murder, and sometimes an execution, though the reports of the latter were seldom made public. That the system was not strict enough to prevent the commission of hanging crimes is proved by the simple fact of the hangman, who had "strung up" some ninety or so, having himself been strangled by a paramour of his wife; and also by the trial of the man Devine, now in Calcutta gaol for life for having, when a convict at Port Blair, in a drunken frolic, consequent on having taken too great a quantity of his ration rum, killed another "fellow comrade in exile!" Fancy such a system at Portland or Dartmoor! But Colonel Man was not satisfied with the progress the settlement was making by the labours of Indian convicts. He sought the services of a Chinaman, the head of one of the two principal secret societies who had planned, ordered, and had been obeyed in the whole affair of the Chinese riots at Penang in 1867, had been tried and found guilty of murder, sentenced to death, reprieved, had his sentence commuted to penal servitude for life, then to a lesser punishment, and when all was quiet, was deported under the Extradition Act to the Straits, and was invited to take up his residence in the Port Blair colony under the wing of his old Penang acquaintance, Colonel Man. Mr. Tan Seng is now either enjoying himself or trading at either the Andamans or Port Blair—he is very wealthy, and numbers of his followers, who in 1867 were compelled in fear of their lives to follow his behests in the Straits, are now working in chains on the roads in Penang. Such is not at all an untruthful but a correct picture of Port Blair as it was and has been. As for what it is now I need scarcely point to the fact of the late assassination, after dark by a convict-for-life murderer, a scoundrel who had been allowed to exercise the calling of a barber, to illustrate what Sydney Smith said, that railway mismanagement would never be improved until a bishop had been sacrificed to it. Verb. sup.—Yours &c., LOOKER-ON.

STATION TALK.

BERAR, Feb. 21.—There is great distress in these provinces owing to the small rainfall during the past season. Cotton, jowaree, and gram, the three crops to which the Berar Koonbi devotes his principal attention, have all suffered greatly from the drought. It is estimated that the yield of cotton will be little over half, and that of jowaree and gram about two-thirds of an average crop. As the population of the Berars is purely agricultural, this deficiency cuts both ways. The unfortunate Koonbi's income is not only decreased, but his cost of living increased. The effects of the famine would have been much more severely felt had not "King Cotton" stepped in to the rescue. Prices this year at Liverpool have ruled so high, and "fair Oomra" has been in such great demand, that the Koonbi's heart has been made glad by the fat sums he has taken home with him for every "ákah" he has sold. Government have also very humanely come forward to do what they can to avert the consequences of famine. In those districts where the unfortunate cultivator has realised literally nothing from his crops no rent has been required of him. In others, where a small harvest has been gathered, twenty or thirty per cent. of the rent due has been paid, and so on all through the Berars the revenue has been collected in proportion to the profits made by the cultivator. Not content with aiding the ryots in this way, however, the Resident of Hyderabad has sanctioned the expenditure of certain sums for famine works, such as the construction of new roads and the repair of old ones. These grants might well be increased considerably, for, although the sums sanctioned will go a long way in paying for labour at the famine rate of two and a-half annas per diem per man, still they cannot be said to be sufficient for the works the authorities profess to be carrying out. We are shortly going to lose our two Commissioners. Major Nembhard, the Commissioner of East Berar, leaves at the end of the coming month for Europe on a well-earned furlough of two years, and Colonel Stubbs, the Acting Commissioner of West Berar, retires from the service at the end of this month. Berar can ill spare these two popular officers, but it would be selfish in us to wish them always to be with us. Society, both in Oomraotee and Akola, will feel a blank when they are gone that it will take some time to fill up. Various rumours are afloat as to their successors. Some say that a Bombay or N.W. Provinces civilian will get East Berar, others that Major Allardice, the senior deputy commissioner in the Commission, will be the lucky man. Mr. Lyall's leave expires about August next; it is very improbable, therefore, that a civilian will be appointed to West Berar, as it would be hardly worth his while to come from a distant province to act for so short a time. On dit, that Captain Huddleston, the Deputy Commissioner of Akola, will officiate till Mr. Lyall's return. It seems very hard upon the members proper of the Berar Commission that any of these senior appointments should be given to outsiders, either civil or military. The officers of the Commission have stuck to it from its formation. They have, as it were, "borne the burden and heat of the day," in bringing these provinces to their present state of peace and prosperity; and now, when their administration is comparatively plain sailing, they certainly deserve, as a reward for their labours, all the "loaves and fishes" there are in the shape of fat appointments. To compel them to share them with civilians, whose only claim to these appointments is that, through the bad management of Government, there are no others to give them, is a gross injustice. We were very gay here a short time ago. All Berar met in Akola to enjoy a ball given by the bachelors of West Berar. The festivities were kept up in a most indefatigable manner, the ball being followed by a lunch with dancing after it, and by another ball the same evening. We have now, however, relapsed into the dreary monotony of existence in India, hard work, and no amusements. Our hopes are, however, kept alive by occasional rumours of another ball shortly in East Berar, a sort of farewell entertainment to Major and Mrs. Nembhard. The climate here for some time has been delightful, but there are signs now of the hot season approaching, and "tatties," "thermantidotes," and "punkas," are being looked to to see that they are all in order against the arrival of hot winds and burning suns.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

IN MEMORIAM.—The Maharaja of Patiala has offered Rs. 15,000 to the Punjab University College to found a scholarship in memory of Lord Mayo.

FEMINE SYMPATHY WITH LADY MAYO.—The ladies of Calcutta have addressed a letter of condolence and farewell to Lady Mayo. The record of attachment and respect was very numerously signed.

THE SEISTAN BOUNDARY.—Rumours are current at Kabul that the Persians do not intend to make any settlement of the Seistan boundary question, and have already sent a body of troops to occupy Seistan.

THE VICEROY'S STAFF.—Major the Hon. E. R. Bourke, Military Secretary to the acting Governor-General, has been directed to remain on special duty at the Presidency for a period of two months.

MILITARY.—We hear by telegraph from Tipai Mukh that the wing of the 22nd Regiment N.I. left on the 29th February, and the Headquarters of the 44th on Saturday, March 2nd. Both regiments left on rafts.

MORE BENGALLIES FOR ENGLAND.—Baboo Rajkomar Sarbadhikari, B.A., Professor of Sanskrit, Canning College, Lucknow, shortly proceeds to England, with a view to study for the Bar, and give evidence before the Indian Finance Committee.

CAPTAIN LOCKWOOD.—We hear that Colonel Baring telegraphed to Captain Lockwood, offering him an aide-de-campship with Lord Northbrook, which was declined. We believe Captain Lockwood has accepted the appointment of magistrate at Dum-Dum.—Indian Daily News.

THE OUDH TALUKDARS AND LADY MAYO.—The Talukdars of Oudh have forwarded an address of condolence to Lady Mayo, which concludes as follows:—"We sympathise in her distress, partake in her grief, and pray before the Almighty that he may impart to her strength, consolation, and fortitude to bear this misfortune."

MILITARY.—We believe that Captain R. H. Grant, A.D.C. to the late lamented Viceroy, and formerly Commissary of Ordnance here, will return to Allahabad as Deputy Assistant Quartermaster General, in the place of Captain Chapman, who goes to Lucknow.—Pioneer.

KATURANDU.—A contemporary states that Mr. C. Girdlestone, and not Colonel James, is to be Resident at the Court of Nipal. Mr. Girdlestone has been appointed, says the same authority, because "his state of health makes his employment in a comparatively cold climate indispensable."

MOURNING IN PUTTIALA.—Upon receiving the news of the death of Lord Mayo, his Highness the Maharajah of Puttiala published a State Gazette ordering the State to go into mourning for three days. Accordingly for three days all the offices and bazaars were closed, the hour-bells were not struck, nor the morning and evening guns fired.

DELHI FEMALE MEDICAL MISSION.—His Highness the Rajah of Puttiala has given Rs. 500 towards building an hospital for women in connection with the Delhi Female Medical Mission. A good site has been secured, and if other native chiefs follow his Highness's example the hospital will be begun this year.—Pioneer.

TELEGRAPHIC ITEMS FROM CALCUTTA.—CALCUTTA, March 10.—Lord Northbrook has intimated by telegraph that on his arrival he will spend a fortnight in Calcutta. The opium sales have closed, showing the revenue from that source to be one million and a quarter over the estimates. It is rumoured that the income tax will be abandoned.—Times of India.

MRS. CROFTON.—A correspondent writing from Simla on the 19th instant says:—"I am sorry to inform you that the wife of our respected chaplain died last evening of affection of the brain. Mrs. Crofton had been long ailing, but no dangerous symptoms showed themselves until within the last few days, during which the sufferer sunk rapidly. This melancholy event has added to the gloom which already pervaded Simla society, whose sympathies, I need not add, are with the bereaved husband and children."—Delhi Gazette.

A CLEVER NATIVE.—Baboo Brajendra Nath Dey, B.A., Student of Canning College, Lucknow, has obtained a First Class in English in the last honour examination of the Calcutta University, and stands second in the order of merit, having passed the Bachelor's examination only three weeks before. Such a brilliant success is unexampled in the progress of education in Upper India, and deserves recognition. The Baboo is comparatively young, and intends proceeding to England to compete for the Civil Service.—Delhi Gazette.

HORTICULTURAL.—Our Indian horticulturists will be interested to hear that a beautiful orchid of the genus cælogyne, species cristata, is now in fine bloom at the Khoosroo Bagh here. This is believed to be the first instance of any orchids of this very delicate genus flowering in the plains of the North-West. In the elegance of its shape and the purity of its colour it is perhaps unrivalled among orchids; the petals are of a dazzling white, and the labellum tinged with bright yellow.—Pioneer.

THE ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF THE QUEEN.—The Governor-General telegraphed to the Secretary of State to express a hope on the part of the Government of India that her Majesty's health had not suffered from the recent cowardly act of which the telegraph informed us, and received the following gracious reply from the Secretary of State on behalf of the Queen:—"From the Secretary of State to the Acting Governor-General. Dated March 2, 12 P.M. The Queen returns her Majesty's best thanks. Her Majesty has not suffered and is well." We hear that the Queen has telegraphed to the Countess of Mayo in reply to inquiries on her part, conveying her Majesty's thanks for the inquiries, and stating that her health had not suffered from the fright.—Indian Daily News.

ASSAULT ON EUROPEANS.—The two friends of the late Viceroy, who were here last month with Mr. Prestage, on a tiger-shooting excursion, left Dacca very recently, having been accommodated by Khajeh Abdool Ghanie with his steam launch as far as Goalundo. Running short of fuel, the vessel stopped at Geor Hat to take in wood. An altercation ensued between the wood merchant and Mr. Carr, of the E. B. R., the engineer of the launch for the time being, and a general melee took place. The two young guardsmen hearing of this, with characteristic pluck rushed to the rescue, but being overpowered by numbers were obliged to fight their way back to the launch. Mr. Carr, being lame, fell, and was very roughly handled, two of his ribs being broken. He was otherwise maltreated. We learn that he is severely injured.—Bengal Times.

A BARRISTER IN THE STAFF CORPS.—We observe that Captain R. P. Nisbet, Bengal Staff Corps, Assistant Commissioner in the Punjab, the newly-called Barrister of the Middle Temple, has already returned from furlough. He has certainly made the best use of his time while away from India. He can, we think, claim the merit of being the first and only "lawyer" in the Bengal Staff Corps, and assuredly deserves recognition by the Government he serves for his zeal and self-denial in passing his furlough in Chambers, reading up to become a more useful member of the Punjab Commission. We notice that he passed ninth of 36 at the examination in Trinity Term, and, to enable him to gain his object, received the unusual honour of a special call—a concession never before made by his Inn. The Benchers in conceding the favour told him that he had fairly earned it.—Delhi Gazette.

EPIDEMIC AMONG HORSES.—With a view to remedy the epidemic amongst the artillery horses at Umballa, which is generally attributed to the unwholesome water used for those animals, the Supreme Government has authorised the local authorities to sink a certain number of wells there for the use of the artillerymen and horses, as recommended by the Deputy Inspector-General of H.M.'s Hospitals.

LIAKAT ALI.—Moulvie Liakat Ali, the mutiny leader, captured four or five months since, will shortly be brought to trial. The delay has arisen in tracing the proofs of his having forfeited any claim he might have had under the general amnesty. It is not asserted that the Moulvie has carried on seditious correspondence with any native princes or chiefs, but it seems tolerably certain that he has corresponded, or let us say had letters from persons not now in India, who in their time have been traitorous rebels.

BRUTAL ASSAULT.—The Pioneer informs us that a very brutal assault was made on a medical officer by three European privates near the rest camp at Mian Mir on Saturday, March 9. He was knocked down and dragged along the ground for nearly half a mile, and is said to be in a very precarious state. From information received by us from other sources it would appear that the case possesses features of an extraordinary and romantic character, and we should not be surprised if the circumstances under which it became possible for the soldiers to treat their victim as they did form the subject of official enquiry.—Englishman.

THE PALUMPORE FAIR.—The Report on the Palumpore Fair of 1871, as published in the Punjab Government Gazette, puts it beyond doubt that the Kooshbegi of Yarkhand had no hand in the non-appearance of the expected Yarkandi caravans. This was due entirely to the unusually early fall of snow, which closed the passes before the traders could get across. The total of the sales at the fair was less by a lakh of rupees than that of 1870. The transactions in tea were confined to native planters and dealers, the European producers finding too good a market elsewhere to bring their tea to compete with that of native manufacture only; also, perhaps, in some degree from the knowledge that the teas taken from Palumpore in 1865 were not appreciated beyond the frontiers. His Excellency Lord Mayo was present at the fair of 1871, and presided at the darbar, which was brilliantly attended by the neighbouring chiefs.—Pioneer.

COLONEL NASSAU LEES.—One of our first Oriental scholars, Colonel Nassau Lees, is at the present moment doing general duty in Fort William! It is added that it is impossible to find an appointment suitable to a scholar so profound, to a soldier of such high experience and cultivated intelligence. It must be our comfort that only a British Government would dare to advance such excuses to justify its neglect. At this very moment, the appointment of resident at a native court, the post which of all others Colonel Lees is qualified to fill, is about to be bestowed on a civilian in virtue of a bad liver. It is this untruth, this injustice, become so common among all classes of our countrymen, which is breaking up the unity, the holding together, the strength of the old race. More is the pity. Only a few months ago Colonel Lees was assured that his services, the services of every officer, were required in India. Of course, it was an untruth, but what of that?—Indian Daily News.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, March 8.—Dulness has continued to be the leading characteristic of this market, and the aggregate of transactions since last mail has been extremely limited.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, March 8.—Jute: There has again been a fall in rates, and the market closes with a downward tendency. Saltpetre: The market closes firm, quotations being for Calcutta washed, 5 per cent. refraction, 8-3 to 8-5, and for Crude 8 per cent. refraction, 7-8 to 8-0. Rice: Prices show a downward tendency. The stocks are very large. Linseed: What little stock of old seed there is in the market is rapidly being taken up for America at slightly higher quotations. Raw Silk: The market still continues without animation, and only thirteen sales have been sold during the week, five bales B.S.D.R. fetching Rs. 20, and eight bales C. D. March bund 14-12. One hundred maunds of native sorts have sold at from 13 to 17-8 per seer. Corahs: A sale of 3,000 pieces is reported at Rs. 168 per corg for the best qualities, and lower in proportion for inferior sorts.

ACCIDENTAL POISONING.—A correspondent informs us of a case of accidental poisoning by arsenic of a young officer at this station, which fortunately did not turn out to be fatal, owing to the unremitting devotion for several hours and great medical skill shown by Assistant-surgeon Rahilly, of the 21st Fusiliers. Our correspondent says he had never seen a worse case in his experience. There were all the symptoms of arsenical poison, and it seems there was arsenic in the house, but it does not appear how it got into the young gentleman's food. Under the circumstances, we think there certainly ought to be an investigation into the case.—Bangalore Herald.

TOBACCO EXPERIMENTS.—The Madras Government have received some genuine Manila tobacco seed for experimental cultivation in this Presidency. The seed will be distributed to the Agri-Horticultural Societies at Madras and Ootacamund, to Mr. E. A. Campbell (Dindigul), and to the collectors of the Godavery, Trichinopoly, Tinnevely, Coimbatore, South Canara, and Malabar Districts; also to the Collectors of the Ganjam, Vizagapatam, Kistna, Tanjore, and Madras Districts, with the request that the results (with sample of produce) may be reported to Government through the Board of Revenue. A supply of the seed will be sent also to the Chief Commissioner of Mysore and to the Resident of Travancore and Cochin for experimental cultivation in those territories, and with the request that this Government may, in due course, be informed of the results of the experiment, with sample of the produce.—Madras Mail.

MR. MAYNE'S SUIT AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.—Mr. Mayne, late Advocate-General at Madras, appears to have had some serious quarrel with the Government. Whether it is that he has no hopes of being confirmed in his acting appointment, as suggested by the Madras Mail, or for any other reason, we are not aware; but the Athenæum reports that on Feb. 29 "he appeared before Mr. Justice Holloway on the original side of the High Court, and made an application for a writ of mandamus against the Government of Madras to show cause why the Government did not summon Mr. Mayne as a member of the Legislative Council to its meetings. Mr. Mayne submitted that his resignation of the Advocate-Generalship and Secretary to the Legislative Council did not touch his right as member, the statute of Parliament allowing a period of two years of service to each member after his nomination. Mr. Justice Holloway remarked that he was sorry that notice of this motion had not been given him a day before, as he would have got the opinion of his brother judges on so important a subject. As, however, it had now come before him he was prepared to dispose of it by granting the rule. Rule nisi granted, returnable in fifteen days."

TIGER SHOOTING AT WELLINGTON.—Our Occasional Correspondent at Coonoor has kindly sent us the following interesting account of a tiger-slaying affair, which took place near Wellington:—"Lieutenant Vipan, of the depot, has killed a tigress in a plucky style. Some natives reported the animal marked in a sholah, about three miles from Wellington, Kartary way, and that a buffalo had been killed. Away went the young sportsman, out came Lady Stripes, and a well-aimed shot took the life out of her there and then. The next day the great tiger-slayer and the chief forester arrived to make inquiries, and have gone on to the Droog, where, it is said, a tiger of extraordinary dimensions had been seen, supposed to be accountable for the disappearance of a female domestic belonging to the establishment of an estate in that direction. Coonoor is filling fast, and almost every house is engaged for the coming season. Voila tout." Since receiving the above, we learn that it was discovered that the tigress had slain and eaten a porcupine, quills and all! Sundry quills were sticking in her paws! What stomachs tigers must have! Porcupine, no doubt, is a tasty morsel, but with its spines, roughish, we should think.—South of India Observer.

ADDRESS OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE TO LADY MAYO.—The following Address, to the widow of our late Viceroy, was adopted at a general meeting of the members of the Chamber of Commerce, on Monday evening last, and will be sent to her Ladyship by the next Mail:—"To her Excellency the Right Hon. the Countess of Mayo. Madam,—As inhabitants of the capital of the Presidency of Madras, we, the members of the Madras Chamber of Commerce, venture to offer your Ladyship the expression of our heartfelt sorrow that an event of unparalleled atrocity has deprived you of a cherished husband, and India of a ruler of eminent ability. That the weight of the grief this terrible catastrophe has occasioned to your Ladyship will be lessened by the sympathy of that public in whose service the life of the late Viceroy was sacrificed we dare not expect; but we may not be wrong in conceiving that it will be alike a source of comfort to his widow to know, and of pride to his children to remember, that all parts of the great Empire over which his Excellency was placed in supreme authority united in their testimony to his worth as a statesman, and in a tribute of grateful respect for his memory. That this land, for whose best interests he so earnestly exerted himself with so great success, should be doomed to witness his death in the maturity of his usefulness and experience is to us a cause of mournful regret; for, though this Presidency was afforded on but one occasion the opportunity of welcoming him, it could not but feel admiration for a Viceroy who, by his own thorough and conscientious discharge of duty, inspired all classes with confidence in the policy of the Government that he so zealously administered."—Madras Times.

COFFEE-PRUNING.—The Indian Statesman makes the following observations upon the present system of pruning coffee in India:—"The growth of coffee in India has been so unfortunate an enterprise hitherto, that planters would do well, we think, to review closely every step of the system upon which they have hitherto gone. Are they quite sure, for instance, that their present system of pruning is correct? That it is a direct interference with the natural development of the tree is admitted. Are the planters, then, quite sure that this interference is not carried too far? A late visitor to the Neilgherry Plantations writes:—"My impressions, whilst riding or strolling through the different fields of coffee on this splendid property, were those of admiration at the vigour and luxurious growth of the tree, the dark glossy green of its leaves, and the uniform healthy appearance of the whole; but I was much struck and surprised at seeing so little fruit. I believe the crop on the trees will not exceed five cwts. an acre all round, even if it reaches that low figure; and this estimate was endorsed and confirmed by my companion, a planter of fifteen years' experience. This small yield seems attributable to the system of pruning now in vogue in the district, by which the very best parts of the tree are cut away; this is followed by what is elsewhere properly termed 'handling,' but here the knife is again used, and melancholy indeed is the effect upon the condition of the tree. It is matter for very grave consideration how much this system of pruning has to do with light crops. It is undeniable that judicious pruning has a wonderful and surprising effect on the bearing capabilities of the coffee tree, but climate, soil, and the seasons, exercise a greater influence in producing crops, and I venture to affirm, that if less wood were taken from the trees, and more done in the way of cultivation — i.e., trenching, terracing, renovating pits, &c., that the soil of this estate, with the stamina which it possesses, together with the natural advantages of its climate, would yield an average of ten cwts. an acre for the next quarter of a century, without exhaustion, and with double profit to its owners."

KURRACHEE'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.—Some fifteen or twenty packages, of respectable dimensions, were forwarded from Kurrachee last Friday to Bombay, for transmission to the International Exhibition at Kensington. Sind is likely to occupy a conspicuous position among contributors. Our worthy deputy collector, Mr. W. A. Ingle, has been indefatigable in his efforts to bring about a valuable collection of articles, and for the assistance he has rendered, and the judicious discrimination exercised by him in the selections made in Kurrachee, he is deserving of the warmest thanks of all true friends of the province.—Sindian, Feb. 21.

ARRIVAL OF LADY MAYO.—Lady Mayo arrived by special train at the Parell station at 10.35 A.M. on Friday last. Her Ladyship was accompanied by the Hon. Mrs. Burne and two children, the Hon. Mr. Bourke, M.P., and Captain Lockwood. Mr. G. S. V. Fitzgerald, private secretary, and Captain Mayne, were in attendance to receive Lady Mayo at the station. A guard of honour was also present to escort the party to Government House, Parell. Lady Mayo left Calcutta at noon on the 5th, arriving at Jubulpore at 7 P.M. on the 6th, staying at the Commissioner's residence, Mr. Grant, and proceeding on the 7th at 8.40 A.M., arrived here yesterday morning. Special instructions were issued by Mr. Conder to the station masters on the G.I.P. line to see that no one, except those actually required to be present for the working of the special train, was allowed to come on the platform at the time the train was due or at any of the stations.—Times of India, March 11.

THE HARBOUR DEFENCES.—The three guns with which the Middle Ground Battery is to be furnished have now been landed safely. The guns, which are the same as the turret-ship 18-tonners, are of great size, and the process of landing them was not unattended with difficulty. They had first to be swung from their position at the head of the dockyard, and put upon low and strong built carriages used for the purpose. Having been brought by rail to the harbour, they were lifted by a crane and lowered over the jetty into a barge provided with "chocks," or wooden frames into which a gun is placed to keep it from rolling. The barge was then towed to the Middle Ground, and if the tide happened to be high enough "skids" or planks were fixed between its side and the shore, and the guns were carefully rolled down them on to the wharf. The artillery then took charge of the guns, and had no difficulty in getting them up to the position on the battery where they are to be mounted. The operations were under the charge of Captain Carew.—Bombay Gazette.

STATUE OF THE QUEEN.—The following is a description of the Queen's statue, to be unveiled at Bombay this month by the Guicowar of Baroda:—The design was submitted to and highly approved by her Majesty. The cost has been £15,500. It is a colossal sitting statue in the best Carrara marble of her Majesty the Queen, with a suitable, very elaborate canopy nearly fifty feet high, also executed in the best marble of various colours. The Royal coat-of-arms is placed on the front of the pedestal, and the Star of India in the centre of the canopy, while on the enriched part, immediately above the statue of her Majesty, the rose of England and the lotus of India, accompanied by the mottoes "God and my Right," and "The Light of Heaven our Guide," are introduced. Besides these accessories, others also are introduced in the design, such as the symbols of strength and friendship, namely, the oak and ivy leaves respectively adorning the plinth and capitals of the columns, with the oak, ivy, and lotus leaves enriching the mouldings surrounding the entire work. Four panels between the columns have been provided as spaces for the inscription in four languages.

A NEW SECT OF HINDOOS.—Lieutenant-Colonel J. Black, Political Agent at Maheekanta, reports that at the village of Loosuria Tabee Kookee, about four miles from Samlajee, a Bheel, by name Kheradee Soormul Ralia, has set himself up as a "Gooroo," or Priest, since May 1869. He believes in the Almighty God. The religion he has established forbids the killing of animals and committing offences. His followers are called Bhuguts, and they, like the higher caste Brahmins, never take their meals without bathing. They put a red mark upon their foreheads and tie a yellow cloth round their turban. Nearly four hundred Bheels in the Edur State have become followers of this Gooroo. They have incurred the displeasure of the Bheels of Meywar and Maheekanta, who treat them as outcasts; and when the Political Agent visited the Gooroo at Loosuria, where he is living with his family, all of whom have joined the sect, he was requested by him to protect him and his followers against the annoyances offered by the other Bheels, and the Political Agent accordingly recommended the neighbouring Chiefs to protect them. The sooner this religion spreads the better, as the followers are bound down by oath neither to drink spirits nor commit any unlawful act.

OFFICIAL NEWS FROM SIND.—News report for the week ending 13th February. Political Department, Commissioner's Office, Camp Jacobabad, 17th February, 1872.—Darogha Attah Mahomed has gone to Khelat after making peace and leaving Ali Jan with ten men in Torbut. The Beloochees have dispersed, and the country is quiet. Meer Bhayan Khan, the Gitchkee chief, residing in the valley of Kedj, now rules; he is a subject of Khelat. The Perso Belooch boundary expedition under Major St. John is at Pisheen, but their progress is retarded by heavy floods. Major-General Pollock entered Afghanistan, at Pisheen, on the 30th January last. He left Jacobabad on the 8th January, Khuzdar 18th, Khelat 25th, and Quettah on the 29th, and proceeded on with the Afghan Commissioner towards Candahar. The Wukkeel's son who accompanied General Pollock to Quettah has returned to Jacobabad, and reports that there is not the slightest truth in the rumour that the General's baggage had been fired upon, no mention of any such circumstance having been made in the course of their journey, and this has been corroborated by a letter from General Pollock himself. His Highness the Khan proposes to leave Khelat very shortly to be present at a conference with the Commissioner in Sind for the consideration of the points of difference between his Highness the Khan and the lately rebellious Sirdars. Since the dismissal of their forces by the Sirdars perfect quiet exists in Cutchee.—Bombay Gazette.

OFFICIAL BLUNDERING.—A good deal of dissatisfaction has been caused in Bombay by the manner of the troopship Crocodile's coming into harbour on Monday and her disembarkation of troops on Wednesday. When she arrived she was flying the yellow flag, but notwithstanding this she came to moorings among the ordinary shipping before she received the harbour health officer on board. It is the rule that in cases like this, where sickness is on board a ship, the health officer shall first inspect her before she takes an anchorage. This was not obeyed. There is a quarantine ground at the mouth of the harbour, where vessels which have sickness on board are expected to stay until they are admitted to pratique. Why the Crocodile did not stay there it is difficult to imagine. Worse than all, as appears to us, the Crocodile disembarked her troops on Wednesday morning while her yellow flag was yet at the masthead. Part of the men were put on board the Semiramis, a hulk said to be intended for different purposes than a sick ship, and (if she is to be used as an epidemic infirmary) at present lying most improperly in the very midst of the shipping in the harbour. The remainder were landed and despatched by rail. It is an exaggerated fancy to suppose it possible that the latter batch of men may have infected those whom they passed on their way to the carriages, nor that these carriages, unless disinfected, may yet spread disease among future passengers. Attention has been conspicuously drawn to these matters by the fact that it is alleged that the troopship Jumna circulated an epidemic which has wrought havoc not only in Bombay, but in Poona, where some of the troops she brought out were sent to. We understand that investigations are being made into the whole of the circumstances.—Bombay Gazette, March 4.

CESSATION OF HOSTILITIES BEYOND THE SCINDE FRONTIER.—A Jacobabad correspondent of the Times of India says:—There now seems some hopes of a reconciliation between the Khan of Khelat and the rebel Sirdars taking place at an early date. The Commissioner in Scinde had it proclaimed in Kutchee that the Sircar was greatly displeased with both parties; that the Sircar could not tolerate raids, pillaging, &c., to take place so near the British border. He, the Commissioner, was anxious that peace be restored in Beloochistan speedily; and he called on both parties to cease hostilities. He has written to the Khan to exercise full authority to carry out the measures the Commissioner has recommended. I am happy to say that a truce has been signed by both sides. All hostilities to cease. The Khan's troops to be withdrawn to Gundava. The Sirdars have bade their men to return to their homes, waiting, of course, in perfect readiness for any future call for their services. Sirdars have now agreed to an arbitration on promise of a fair and impartial inquiry into their complaints, and a full restitution of their rights. The Khan has placed every question in the hands of Sir William Merewether, with the required authority to act for him, and will willingly give approval and consent to his decisions. The Khan will not be able to attend the conference in Kutchee, but will send his Shagazee Wullee Mahomed. Captain Harrison, the Political Agent at Khelat, will also be present. They are expected to arrive at Bagh on the 25th inst., when Sir William Merewether will leave Jacobabad to join them. The conference that was ordered by the Supreme Government to be held at Jacobabad has not come off yet. Sir William has had his own way, and has taken the full responsibility of terminating the anarchy of the border. Though it is being very slowly brought about, I think permanent peace and quiet will be established in Beloochistan. After matters have come to a fair settlement, the Khan is to be advanced one lakh of rupees by the British Government, and his subsidy is to be increased to Rs. 75,000 a year.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, March 11.—For Grey Goods the demand continues very moderate, while the generally quiet tone of the advices from England give importers no inducement to hold for more paying prices. In Bleached Cloths there has been considerably more doing of late, and prices are the turn again in favour of sellers. In Dyed and Printed, also, there is more animation, and clearances from first hands have been on a much enhanced scale, while prices also have a hardening tendency. Metals have been extremely firm, although prices are not higher, with the exception of Iron, which has advanced 8s. 8 per catty.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, March 11.—Cotton: A limited business has been done, at former rates; the total purchases on European account being 15,000 bales. In other articles of Export there is no change worthy of note.

MONEY MARKET.—BOMBAY, March 11.—Exchange: The market has been dull, and we now quote for 6 months' sight paper on London as follows:—Bank Bills, 2s. to 2s. 0 1-16d.; Credits, 2s. 0 1/2d.; Documents, 2s. 0 3-16d. per rupee. The rates on China for 60 days' sight drafts are quoted at Rs. 219 per 100 dollars.

SALARIES.—The following is published in supersession of rule 13 of P.W.D. notification No. 341 of Oct. 7, 1870, regarding the salaries of officers of the Engineer establishment:—XIII. Military officers other than royal engineers now in the dept., who entered the British or Indian army before 1859, to have the option of remaining on their present conditions as to staff and maximum salaries, or of accepting the new scale of salaries; the declaration of choice to be made at once. Officers who entered the army in 1859 and subsequently, to be placed on the consolidated scale.

TRAVELLING ON THE PUBLIC SERVICE.—The following ruling by the Government of India is published for information and guidance, with reference to G.O. No. 502 of 1869:—"Every officer travelling on the public service is bound—of course with a reasonable regard to his own convenience and health—to proceed by the least expensive route, when he can reach his destination equally well by land or by water; . . . the Government cannot in any case recognise the fact that the officer might have put the State to heavier expense by choosing the other mode of travelling than that which he may have actually adopted as any ground whatever for an alteration in the travelling charges to be passed to him."

STAFF—PAY—ON LEAVE.—The following general order, by the Government of India in the Military Department is republished:—Addendum.—Under the authority of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, the following addition is made to Clause IX. of the Furlough Regulations published in G.O. No. 1,064, dated Nov. 10, 1868:—"After the words 'intervals of six years,' in the sixth line, insert the words 'and so on up to the maximum hereafter prescribed.' Clause XV. will hereafter be as follows:—"XV.—If the aggregate of two years' furlough is exceeded, whether on medical certificate or private affairs, the officer will vacate his appointment and be restricted to English furlough pay." Order books to be corrected accordingly.

Feb. 2.—No. 908.—Read—

Resolution No. 4,620, dated Oct. 27, 1871, directing the credit to the Government of India of the accumulated funds of the Bengal Covenanted Civil Service Annuity Fund.

Letter from Secretary, Civil Service Annuity Fund, dated Nov. 8, 1871, inquiring regarding the issue of annuity warrants.

Office memorandum to Home Department, No. 3,013, dated Dec. 13, 1871.

Office memorandum from Home Department, No. 5,768, dated Dec. 30, 1871.

Resolution.—The Governor general in Council is pleased to resolve that, so far as regards payments of annuities in India, the formal annuity warrants issued by the managers of the Bengal Civil Service Annuity Fund, before Oct. 17, 1871, be regarded as sufficient authority for the payment of the annuities from the general revenues.

2. As regards the following retired members of the Bengal Civil Service to whom annuities payable in India have been granted on the old scale since June 24, 1870, the date from which the new scale of annuities takes effect, the Governor general in Council directs that their annuities be raised to £1,000, or Government Rs. 10,666½, with effect from the date of their retirement:—

Name.	Date of Retirement.
Mr. C. F. Montresor	Sept. 15, 1870.
Mr. C. Horne	Aug. 17, 1870.
Mr. W. M. Beaufort	May 11, 1871.

3. With regard to future applications for annuity the Governor general in Council directs the adoption of the rules stated beneath, which should be added under Civil Pension Code, Supplement A, Section 4; the present Rule 1 under that section becoming Rule 2.

4. The deductions prescribed in Civil Pension Code, Supplement A, Section 3, were under the former practice recovered directly by the managers from officers on leave, who drew their leave allowances from the Home Treasury of the Government of India; and also, in some cases, from officers on leave who drew their leave allowances in India. The recoveries will be made through the Annuity Fund Establishments, up to and including the 26th October, 1871. After that date, the recoveries will be made, by deduction or otherwise, by the Government of India.

5. Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India will be requested to make in future the necessary deductions from allowances paid at the Home Treasury of the Government of India. The deductions required should always be stated in last pay certificates delivered to officers going on leave.

1. The following rules regulate the procedure with respect to applications for annuity:—

- Applications for permission to resign the service, and to obtain an annuity should, if the officer be in India, be submitted to the Government of India, Madras, or Bombay (as the case may be). If the officer be in Europe, they may be submitted to her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.
- In the Government of India, they are considered first in the Home Department, which, if the application be for an annuity under Section 4, should obtain the report of the Comptroller general as to the officer's claim in respect of service and active service, and also as to whether there are any demands against him on account of the deduction prescribed in Section 3, or on any other account.
- If the resignation of the officer be accepted, the case should be forwarded to the Financial Department, where a resolution will be recorded, granting the annuity or gratuity to which the officer may be entitled.
- The copy of this resolution forwarded to the officer will be his his authority for drawing the annuity or gratuity.

EXPENDITURE—PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.

Jan. 12.—Resolution.—It is usual for officers, when submitting propositions for the revision of establishments, to set down the average monthly cost of a pay which rises from a minimum to a maximum, however quickly, at the mean between the minimum and the maximum.

2. As a matter of fact, however, the monthly average cost of a pay so fixed, unless the period of rise be very long, is much higher than this. By the present erroneous practice officers may be led to propose, and perhaps the Government sometimes may sanction, proposals for the revision of establishments under a practical misapprehension of their actual financial effect.

3. It is not at present possible to show exactly what the average monthly cost of a progressive pay is. No doubt it varies under varying circumstances, and under all circumstances it depends largely upon the length of the period of rise.

4. The Governor-general in Council is, however, convinced that the average monthly cost of a pay which rises by five equal annual increments from a minimum to a maximum is, at least, the minimum plus two-thirds, and in the case of Ministerial establishments three-fourths, of the difference between the minimum and the maximum.

5. H.E. in Council is accordingly pleased to direct that, for the present, the average monthly cost of such pay shall be calculated in this way:—

Examples—

The average monthly cost of the pay of an officer in the classified list in the Financial Department, which rises from Rs. 400 a month by five annual increments of Rs. 40 to Rs. 600 a month, is Rs. 400 + $\frac{1}{3}$ of Rs. 200 (Rs. 134) = Rs. 534.

The average monthly cost of the pay of a clerk rising from Rs. 100 a month by five equal annual increments of Rs. 10 to Rs. 150 a month is Rs. 100 + $\frac{1}{4}$ of Rs. 50 = (Rs. 37-8) = Rs. 137-8.

6. If the period of rise is twenty years, the average monthly cost may be taken at the exact mean.

7. In other cases an intelligent estimate may be made.

Ordered, that this resolution be published in the Gazette of India, and communicated to the Departments Governments of India, to the local Governments, to the heads of departments, and to the officers of account and audit for information and guidance.

R. B. CHAPMAN,

Secy. to the Govt. of India.

ISSUE OF CLOTHING TO THE TROOPS.

In conformity with the practice in force in England, as laid down in the Royal Clothing Warrant of 1865, H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council, in concurrence with H.E. the C. in C., is pleased to direct that the following rules be observed in the issue of clothing, and of materials for the preparation of clothing, to the European and native troops in India:—

1. The clothing for British cavalry, for R.H.A., and for the mounted portion of Royal Artillery, will be supplied either made up or in materials as may be required.

2. The clothing for dismounted Royal Artillery will be supplied made up, with the exception of that for the staff sergeants of the head quarters of brigades and of batteries, as well as that for ten per cent. of the non-commissioned officers and men, which may, if required, be issued in materials.

3. The clothing for British infantry will be supplied made up, with the exception of that for the staff sergeants and for the band, and of ten suits per company, which may, if required, be issued in materials.

4. Clothing in materials will be supplied cut out and trimmed, except that for staff sergeants, bands, and ten per cent. of non-commissioned officers and men, which may, if required, be issued in piece without being cut out and trimmed.

5. The native army in all its branches will be supplied with clothing made up, with the exception of that for the native commissioned officers and for one havildar and five rank and file per troop or company, which may, if required, be issued in materials, but cut out and trimmed.

6. Such corps only as have heretofore drawn clothing wholly in materials will be permitted still to do so, but the materials will in future be supplied cut out and trimmed.

7. These rules will have effect at the three Presidencies with respect to the clothing, which will be due on the 1st April, 1873, and to all subsequent issues.

8. All previous orders on the subject are hereby cancelled.

BENGAL CIVIL SERVICE ANNUITY FUND.

Feb. 2.—No. 908.—Resolution.—The Governor-General in Council is pleased to resolve that, so far as regards payments of annuities in India, the formal annuity warrants issued by the managers of the Bengal Civil Service Annuity Fund, before Oct. 27, 1871, be regarded as sufficient authority for the payment of the annuities from the general revenues.

2. Mr. C. F. Montresor, Sept. 15, 1870.

Mr. C. Horne, Aug. 17, 1870.

Mr. W. M. Beaufort, May 11, 1871.

3. With regard to future applications for annuity, the Governor-General in Council directs the adoption of the rules stated beneath, which should be added under Civil Pension Code, Supplement A, Section 4; the present rule 1 under that section becoming rule 2.

4. The deductions prescribed in Civil Pension Code, Supplement A, Section 3, were, under the former practice, recovered directly by the managers from officers on leave who drew their leave allowances from the Home Treasury of the Government of India; and also, in some cases, from officers on leave who drew their leave allowances in India. The recoveries will be made through the Annuity Fund Establishments, up to and including October 26, 1871. After that date the recoveries will be made, by deduction or otherwise, by the Government of India.

5. Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India will be requested to make in future the necessary deductions from allowances paid at the Home Treasury of the Government of India. The deductions required should always be stated in last pay certificates delivered to officers going on leave.

1. The following rules regulate the procedure with respect to applications for annuity:—

(a.) Applications for permission to resign the service and to obtain an annuity should, if the officer be in India, be submitted to the Government of India, Madras, or Bombay (as the case may be). If the officer be in Europe, they may be submitted to her Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

(b.) In the Government of India they are considered first in the Home Department, which, if the application be for an annuity under Section 4, should obtain the report of the Comptroller-general as to the officer's claim in respect of service and active service, and also as to whether there are any demands against him on account of the deduction prescribed in Section 3, or on any other account.

(c.) If the resignation of the officer be accepted, the case should be forwarded to the Financial Department, where a resolution will be recorded, granting the annuity or gratuity to which the officer may be entitled.

(d.) The copy of this resolution forwarded to the officer will be his authority for drawing the annuity or gratuity.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.—FURLOUGH.

The following communication from the Government of India in the Military Department, and its enclosure, are published for information and guidance in the P.W.D.:—

Office memo. No. 925, dated Sept. 29, 1871.

The undersigned has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of memorandum No. 598, A. G., dated Sept. 15, 1871, from the P.W.D., inquiring to what extent the decision of this department, published in Financial Department notification No. 447 of Jan. 19, 1869, regarding the grant of furlough on medical certificate to a military officer before the completion of eight years' actual service in India, is affected by the provisions of G.G.O. No. 613, dated July 14, 1871.

2. In reply, he has to state that the above G.O. was not intended to supersede the previous ruling, and contains no new rule except in so far that it enables local governments and administrations, without the prior reference to the Supreme Government hitherto necessary for the grant of furlough to grant limited leave as furlough under the terms of Rule 11 of the Furlough Regulations.

3. A copy of a letter (No. 923) of this date to the Government of Bombay, explaining the conditions under which local governments are empowered to grant this leave is enclosed for the information of the P.W.D.

Letter No. 923, dated Sept. 29, 1871, from the Govt. of India in the Military Dept. to the Govt. of Bombay, Military Dept.

I am directed to acknowledge your letter, No. 3,661, dated Sept. 6, 1871, inquiring as to the interval at which a grant of furlough under Rule 11 of the Furlough Rules of 1868 may be repeated.

2. In reply, I am to observe that leave under Rule 11 can only be given when the officer is not entitled to ordinary furlough, or is, owing to the number of absentees, unable to take it. Apart from this condition, there is no prescribed limit within which such leave may not be repeated, nor was it intended to fix any.

3. Leave under Rule 11 is of so exceptional a nature, and can only be given in such cases of extreme and proved urgency, that it must be of the rarest occurrence for any one officer to come under its operation a second time within any reasonable period.

4. Provided, therefore, that such leave is only granted in perfectly good faith, and is not allowed to become a form of privilege leave with a pro forma certificate attached, the Gov. Gen. in Council is of opinion that no limitation in respect to periods need be laid down.

EXAMINATIONS IN THE NATIVE LANGUAGES.—The Committee of Examiners appointed to conduct the examinations under the rules notified in the Calcutta Gazette of Sept. 21, having reported the result of the examinations held in January and February, 1872, it is hereby notified that certificates of eligibility for the branches of the public service specified have been granted to the following gentlemen, viz.:—For the subordinate executive service, police, and the commission of the non-regulation provinces (in addition to a number of native gentlemen): Mr. J. On the report of the Central Examination Committee, the following officers are declared to have passed at the examination held in December, 1871, in the subjects mentioned against their names:—Mr. R. A. Fisher, extra assistant commissioner, has passed in revenue by the higher standard, and is still liable to a further examination in Judicial, Bengali, and Assamese by that standard. Mr. J. G. Official Papers.

THE ENGLISH UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.

(Gazette of India, Feb. 17.)

Despatch from the Government of India in the Financial Department to the Secretary of State for India, No. 227, dated Oct. 4, 1870.

We have the honour to acknowledge your Grace's despatch No. 84, dated March 18, 1870, upon the subject of the proposed alterations in the Uncovenanted Service Absentee Rules.

2. Your Grace is pleased to assent to the rules which we have proposed for holders of offices now, for the most part, filled by English gentlemen, with the modification that the maximum allowance on furlough be reduced to £800 per annum, and that the rules be applied only to officers of the education department appointed from England, and to such others of those now actually in the service as we may think fit to include in a nominal list to be submitted for your approval.

3. We infer from the concluding sentence of the 6th paragraph of the despatch that your Grace is willing that the same rules should apply, hereafter, to all uncovenanted servants who may be appointed from England, although it is difficult to reconcile with this concession the limitation of the present operation of the rules prescribed in the earlier clause of the paragraph to "officers of the education department" so appointed.

4. In respect to all other uncovenanted servants, your Grace assents to the second set of rules proposed by our Government, which are, in fact, the existing rules slightly modified.

5. We fully accept the principles upon which the orders of her Majesty's Government are based, viz., that, on the one hand, all offices to which it is desirable to appoint persons not natives of India, should be, as far as practicable, filled from the ranks of the covenanted civil service or from the staff corps; and that, on the other hand, so far as may be possible and consistent with the requirements of the public service, all offices other than those reserved for the covenanted civil service, and those for which, as explained below, technical or professional qualifications are desirable, should be held by natives of India.

6. Further, we agree with your Grace in thinking that, as a rule, it is desirable, as far as practicable, to engage in Great Britain the services of such natives of that country or of the continent of Europe, or of America, as it may be deemed proper to enlist in the junior branches of the uncovenanted service of India; and we cordially share the disfavour with which her Majesty's Government look on the appointments in India of Englishmen to situations that ought only, as a rule, to be filled by members of the covenanted civil and military services. We are not aware, indeed, that any such system is growing up in India as is supposed by her Majesty's Government. We append to this despatch two statements (A and B), showing the manner in which, at a recent date, offices in India were in this respect filled, from which, we think, your Grace will see that there has not hitherto been any important departure from law and rule in the manner in which appointments have been made. There are at this moment very few Uncovenanted officers holding offices usually filled from the Covenanted Service; and we believe that completely satisfactory reasons can be given in the case of almost all of these few exceptions.

7. At the same time, we are not prepared to deny that, if vigilance be not exercised, there might arise some danger of unconstitutional irregularities. It is obvious that, under the existing system of recruitment for the Covenanted Civil Service of India by open competition, no Englishman who has not succeeded in that competition can (as a rule, and except under the provisions of 24 and 25 Vic., cap. 54, sec. 3) be appointed to any of the reserved offices without injustice to those successful competitors who are eligible thereto. And, apart from this, it is most desirable, in the interests of economy, that suitable employment should be found for the numerous Junior Covenanted Civilian and officers of the Staff Corps at present in our service, and that appointments for which they are fitted should generally be filled from their ranks.

8. We are quite prepared, with your Grace's approval, to take, as a general rule for our own guidance, that whenever any office can, with due regard to the public interests, and to the claims of Uncovenanted officers already in the service, be filled by a Covenanted Civil Servant or by an officer of the Staff Corps, no other person, not a native of India, shall be appointed to it. We shall be glad, indeed, to see some such rule prescribed by her Majesty's Government for general observance by every Government in India. It would not, of course, be understood to prohibit the appointment of persons possessing special professional qualifications to offices in which such qualifications are necessary, or of any person whatever to any office which he can legally fill, and which it is clearly for the interests of the public service that he should hold.

9. We have entered fully into these important matters lest any misapprehension of our policy regarding them should prevent her Majesty's Government from assenting to the rules for regulating the leave of absence of our uncovenanted servants, which we have now so often recommended. For we venture to represent to your Grace that the instructions which we have now received impose upon us a duty which we cannot satisfactorily perform, and which might, if obeyed, lead in the future to grave injustice to deserving members of the uncovenanted service, and cause some inconvenience to our administration.

10. However carefully we may endeavour to act upon the principles we have above described, there must, for many years to come, and probably always, be many offices to which it will be expedient to appoint persons who are neither natives of India nor members of the Covenanted Civil and Military Services. It is no disparagement of the natives of India to say that, as a rule, they do not at present possess, and perhaps never will possess in as great a degree as natives of some other countries, the professional skill, strength, and endurance necessary for the due performance of the duties of many of the offices detailed in the margin of the preamble to the rules submitted for your approval with our despatch No. 74, dated March 22, 1869. Nor do we think that the interests of India require that there should be any hesitation about the employment of persons not born in India, even in the Uncovenanted Civil Service of the State, in offices for which they are decidedly more qualified than natives of the country. The appointment of such persons to such offices is not, in our opinion, at all inconsistent with the principle that natives of India have a preferential right to employment in the service of their own country so far as they are qualified for it.

11. For many of the offices specified in the list above referred to natives of India are not at present qualified.

12. And in regard to the employment of members of the Covenanted Civil Service or of the Staff Corps in those offices, if the list be examined it will be found that sometimes for the offices contained in it special professional acquirements are necessary, which are not possessed by members of the Covenanted Civil and Military Services,—as, for instance, for the Marine Department, for the Telegraph Department, for the Public Works Department, for the Forest Department, for the various offices filled by barristers-at-law, for the Geological Department, and in a less degree, perhaps, for the Educational Department. Sometimes, again, it will be found, as in the case of the Financial Department and the Police Department, that the scale of remuneration fixed is far too low to attract members of the Covenanted Civil Service, except in the higher posts, from which, if the Uncovenanted departmental officers were excluded, either the pay of the lower posts must be greatly raised, or the efficiency of the administration must be greatly impaired.

13. We venture to think that on re-examining the list, your Grace will find that to most of the offices specified therein neither gentlemen of the Covenanted Civil Service or the Staff Corps, nor natives of India could, as a rule, be appointed; either because they are not at all likely to be possessed of the needful professional acquirements, or because the emoluments are insufficient to attract them.

14. It being then established that the many important offices cannot ordinarily be filled either by natives of India, or by officers of the Covenanted Civil Service or the Staff Corps, it is obviously most important that suitable rules for leave of absence to the officers who must fill them should be passed. Not only have the officers themselves a strong claim to liberal treatment in this respect, but it is most important in the interests of the public service to facilitate by every legitimate concession, periodical visits to Europe or America by every native of those continents in our service, Uncovenanted as well as Covenanted. And this is, perhaps, especially true in respect to the officers of what may be called the professional departments.

15. We cannot suppose that it was your Grace's intention, prima facie, to exclude from the benefit of the more liberal rules to which you have assented, the many meritorious Uncovenanted officers who are now in our service, with the exception of the comparatively small number of "officers of the Education Department who have been appointed from England." We are fully sensible of the merits of these officers; but some of the most deserving and highest officers in the Educational Department itself would not come within the narrow category stated in your Grace's despatch; and we could name many officers of distinction in other branches of the service who would not be, under your Grace's present orders, admitted to the benefit of the proposed rules as of right, but only by the comparatively invidious process of having their names included in a special list. Your Grace will probably be pleased, at any rate, to extend the benefits of the more favourable rules to every Uncovenanted officer holding any of the offices in the list attached to our last despatch, already appointed from England; as, indeed, we understand you to intend to do to all officers who may hereafter be so appointed.

16. But we desire to deprecate being compelled to submit at all the nominal roll for which your Grace calls. Such a roll must, in all probability, simply contain the names of the incumbents of all the offices in the list attached to our proposed rules; at least, we can conceive of no ground upon which we could make any distinction between two gentlemen, not natives of India, of equal rank, or holding the same office, in our service. We are so sure that, if we invite the local governments to compile the nominal lists desired by your Grace, we shall be met with urgent remonstrances, that we have resolved to take no further steps in the matter until we shall be favoured with fresh instructions from your Grace. We desire strongly to recommend that, whatever may be decided for the future, every officer now in our service in any of the appointments mentioned in the list attached to our draft rules may be admitted to the benefits of the more liberal rules which have now been approved by H.M.'s Government.

17. And, for the future, we would submit, for the consideration of her Majesty's Government, that we shall be placed in an unfair position if the fact of an officer being appointed in India shall, ipso facto, place him in an unfavourable position as compared with officers not more than his equals, and, perhaps, his inferiors, only because they have been appointed in England. We have already stated our opinion that, as a rule, it is advisable to engage in England persons not natives of India required for our service in India; but to this rule there must be many exceptions. There can be no good reason why barristers, engineers, and other professional or scientific men should be held disqualified, or partially disqualified for service in India, merely because they are possessed of the special advantage of Indian experience. Some of our most distinguished officers have been thus engaged in India after acquiring valuable practical experience before entering the Government service. We have appointed some engineers to high posts in the department of Public Works for the construction of State Railways, for the very reason that they were on the spot, and that they had had extended experience of the people and the mode of conducting work in India. We have also taken over several engineers of experience from the East India Irrigation Company, with reference to whom and to those specified above we have already said (Public Works Department Despatch No. 157, dated Nov. 24, 1869) that the improved rules will properly be applicable. It can hardly be your Grace's intention to fetter the discretion of the Government of India in respect to the employment of such men by restrictions in respect to leave of absence. It would, doubtless, be possible for the Government of India to obtain, in the case of each individual among such officers, the special sanction of the Secretary of State to his admission to the benefit of the leave rules of his class; but the necessity for such a reference would not, perhaps, be in keeping with the status of the Government of India.

18. Again, it is doubtful how far anything would be gained by recruiting in England for some of the departments of which the service is limited, and the pay in the subordinate grades very low. Thus it is our intention to select officers for the service of the Financial Department by a system of nominated competitive examination in India; there would probably not, on an average, be more than two such admissions in a year. Thus, again, students trained in the Roorkee College are admitted to the service of the Public Works Department, and may rise, in fact have risen, to distinction in that service. We do not suppose that it can seem desirable to your Grace to insist upon the application of unfavourable leave rules to officers who have entered our service by such avenues.

19. Upon the whole, we must express our decided opinion that, however expedient it may be to engage in England such young men not natives of India as we require for our service, it is not desirable that we should be deprived of a free discretion to admit to our service persons already in India; but that, if her Majesty's Government think fit to limit our discretion in any way, it should be effected by some direct regulation, and not by distinctions in regard to leave privileges.

20. We desire also to press again upon your Grace's consideration our strong sense of the injustice that will be done if the furlough allowances of our Uncovenanted officers be subjected to a lower maximum limit than that (£1,000 a-year) fixed for the Civil and Military Services. The number of Uncovenanted Servants that will be affected by a maximum limit of even £600 a-year is very small, and those who would be entitled to a maximum limit of more than £800 a-year will probably never much exceed fifty, of whom it is very unlikely that more than six or eight would ever be absent on furlough simultaneously. The financial gain, therefore, of treating the Uncovenanted Service less liberally in this respect than the rest of our officers, would not in any way compensate for the sense of wrong caused by making an invidious distinction between officers doing, perhaps, the same duty, and at any rate receiving the same salaries, merely because they belong to different classes. A main object of the changes made in 1868 in the Furlough Rules was to get rid of such invidious and inequitable distinctions. It may reasonably be presumed that, as a rule, no Uncovenanted officer can attain to such emoluments as would entitle him, under the rules we have proposed, to absentee allowances in excess of even £600 unless he be distinguished by special merits or special professional acquirements. It cannot be desirable to stigmatise such officers by treating them, upon the ground of the class distinction, less liberally than their fellows of the rank to which they have honourably attained.

21. In conclusion, we desire again to press upon your Grace's consideration our decided opinion that the best, and, indeed, the only satisfactory method of dealing with this somewhat difficult subject is that suggested in our despatch No. 220, dated Aug. 28, 1868. Our Uncovenanted Service is composed of natives of India and natives of other countries. It is very undesirable to give any advantages to the one class which are not given to the other. Yet, inevitably, rules that may be very liberal for natives of India are totally unsuited for natives of other countries, and vice versa. The solution proposed by the Committee of 1868, viz., to give the same leave indiscriminately to all our officers, but longer leave out of India than in India, appears to us still to be the true and the only thoroughly satisfactory method of disposing of the question.

Abstract of Appendix A, referred to in the 6th paragraph of the above despatch, being a statement of the number of offices in India which were filled in 1869 by Uncovenanted Servants, but which might have been filled by Covenanted Civil Servants or Military Officers.

BONUS COMPENSATION.

The following circular has been issued by the Indian Officers' Bonus Committee :—

Reasons for a Third Appeal from the Indian Officers to Parliament, and why their Petition should be Supported :—

1. Because it has been twice decided by the House of Commons that their grievance is a substantial one, and should be redressed.*

2. Because, although the Bengal Government expresses an opinion that substantial justice has been done to the officers under Lord Cranborne's scheme, the signature of the Commander-in-Chief, Lord Napier of Magdala, is not appended thereto, whilst the Governments of Bombay and Madras are decidedly of opinion that the above scheme does not sufficiently remunerate those officers for their loss of Bonus on retirement, and yet the Secretary of State for India positively refuses to revise the above scheme.

3. Because, by the passing of the 4th Clause, "Army Regulation Bill," as amended by Sir C. Wingfield, with consent of Mr. Cardwell, their late brother officers in the new Line Regiments (late Company's European Regiments), are now getting from the Commissioners what they themselves have been nine years petitioning for, nine officers having retired since the passing of the Act, receiving their full Bonus.

4. Because full compensation has been lately awarded by Government for the over regulation price of commissions in the Queen's service, which, though customary, was illegal, whilst the Bonus or purchase system was not only "customary," but encouraged and sanctioned by the Court of Directors, by the Board of Control, and consequently by the British Government; and the present Secretary of State for India admitted in the House of Lords, "that since the passing of Pitt's 'Indian Act,' nothing had been done by the Government of India for which his or her Majesty's Governments for the time being had not been completely responsible."

5. Because some of them have subscribed for fully thirty years, in the full expectation of receiving the said Bonus on retirement from their juniors (which the Secretary of State for India refuses them), which Bonus they would have received had not the amalgamation taken place.

6. Because their Rights and Privileges, described by the late Lord Derby in the House of Lords as their expectations, and including, of course, their old system of promotion, were guaranteed to them by clauses in two Acts of Parliament; but the creation of the Staff Corps having destroyed their old system of promotion, contrary to the Parliamentary Guarantee, the Bonus System necessarily collapsed; so the grievous loss of which the sufferers complain was occasioned by the direct infringement of the Parliamentary Guarantee.

7. Because the over-regulation price of commissions, and the Bonuses for the new Line Regiments, are paid out of the income-tax, to which the Indian officers contribute their portion, and yet they are denied these very Bonuses by the Secretary of State for India, which would come out of the Indian Exchequer.

THE AGRA BANK.

At the general meeting, on March 27, Mr. James Thompson, as chairman, moved the reception and adoption of the report and accounts, and said that the accounts now submitted were, so to speak, a compound of what was good and what was not good—that was to say, that a good profit had been realised at some of the branches, whilst at others the reverse was the case. In London especially, and also at Calcutta and Madras, the result of the working during the past year had been altogether cheering, and at those three centres of business the net profits realised had amounted to upwards of 9 per cent. upon the capital employed at those branches, which amounted to no less than three-fourths of the whole capital of the bank. If the remaining one-fourth of the capital had yielded the same return, the directors would now have been in a position to recommend a dividend for the half-year at the rate of 11 per cent. per annum, and, over and above that, they would have been able to set aside the large sum of £20,000 to the reserve. But the fact was that the development of the business of a bank like this, after what it had already gone through, and after the knock-down check which it received some years ago, was a gradual process. He was sorry to say that the Bombay branch had shown a deficiency, which did not arise from bad debts, but was consequent upon former errors of management. The management had now been changed, and he hoped that, on the occasion of the next meeting, he should be able to make a more satisfactory report of the results of the working of that branch. There was also a deficiency in the working of the Kurrachee branch. He need scarcely say that the great object of the directors was only to maintain such branches in the East as could be worked to an advantage, and the necessary action would be taken in that direction as soon as the directors were satisfied that the business available at any of those branches could not, under good management, be made remunerative. The Hong Kong branch also, during the past year, had been an incubus; but it was due to the manager of that branch to say that the want of success there had been owing to the difficulties with which he had had to contend. There was no doubt that the Hong Kong branch was most important in an exchange aspect, and it was difficult to carry on exchange operations with China without a branch there. Referring to the position of the estate of the Agra and Masterman's Bank, he said that good progress had been made during the year in further realisation of the outstanding assets. Since the beginning of the year other assets had been realised, which enabled the directors to make a distribution to the shareholders of the late Agra and Masterman's Bank at the rate of £1. 15s. per share. In conclusion, the chairman expressed his perfect confidence in the future increased prosperity of the bank.

The resolution for the adoption of the report and accounts was seconded by Colonel the Hon. H. B. Dalzell, and, after some discussion, carried.

A dividend was then declared for the past half-year, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum.

The retiring director, Mr. J. Thomson, was re-elected, and the auditors were also re-appointed.

A motion was also carried to increase the number of directors to seven, and Sir F. Arrow and Dr. Richardson were elected additional members of the board. A vote of thanks to the chairman closed the proceedings.

THE INDIAN FINANCE COMMITTEE.

At the conclusion of Colonel Chesney's examination on March 22, Mr. Thornton was re-examined on the subject of the vast expenses but unproductiveness of the Orissa Canal. This Canal, which now formed one of the chief public works of India, was commenced by a public company, with a capital of £1,000,000. The object was to extend the means of irrigation, and create a better water-supply. When the Government took it up, at the time that the company had expended all their capital, the canal was only cut for a few miles. Since then a great deal more money had been expended on the works under the Government guarantee. The canal has cost altogether £1,600,000. It is not yet completed, but is now more in a state to earn money than it has ever hitherto been. It is made to pay by rents and levying a water-rate in the districts through which it runs. The earnings of the canal last year were about £400, which, of course, was next to nothing as a set-off against the expenses. The canal is expected to be opened to its full length in the present year. The views of the Government and the views of the company are opposed as to the modes of working the canal for irrigation and all other purposes. The charge for irrigation is six rupees per acre. (Mr. Thornton undertook to produce at a future day an estimate of the present productive resources of the canal, together with the present expenditure on it.)

The Government still take a very unfavourable view of the prospects of the canal. They had latterly become convinced that the canal had been too costly a work, and continued to be so, for it at present to pay its expenses. It had been through the intercession of Sir Arthur Cotton that Lord Stanley had agreed to guarantee the company. The canal had never been properly filled with water ever since its commencement. Latterly a scheme had been proposed to replenish the canal with water by means of an extensive system of tanks. This was the plan, and the Government had it still under consideration, but it had never been practically tried to be carried out. The Madras Government was responsible for having originally induced the Government to undertake the canal. The charges for irrigation are an independent rate, as stated, and a separate water rate imposed by the Government. Mr. Thornton undertook to bring papers on a future occasion showing the cost of maintenance of the works, the charges for management, &c. It is necessary to explain, with regard to the present condition of irrigation works in India, as follows :—In the year 1859 a guarantee of interest on their capital was given to a company formed for the purpose of constructing works of irrigation in the Madras Presidency, and in the following year a company was started to carry out works of a similar character in the Bengal Presidency without the aid of such assistance from Government; but the latter company having failed to raise the necessary capital for carrying out their works, have, since 1869, relinquished all their rights in those undertakings to the Indian Government, in return for a repayment of the sums expended by them, together with a small additional amount as compensation for their officers. The committee adjourned to Friday, 5th April.

Miscellaneous.

BRITISH INDIAN EXTENSION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The directors of the British Indian Extension Telegraph Company (Limited) have declared a dividend of 2 per cent., making, with the interim distribution of 6 per cent., a total of 8 per cent. for the year ended the 31st of December.

* The last occasion being on the 28th June, 1870, when Colonel Sykes presented a general petition from the officers against the provisions of Lord Cranborne's despatch, and moved an address of the House of Commons to the Queen, which had for its object a prayer that her Majesty would be pleased to redress the grievance of the Bonus claimants inflicted by Lord Cranborne's instructions in his despatch of the 8th August, 1868, in directing deductions to be made from the claimants which made the proposed bonus compensation a mockery.

SUEZ CANAL.—The directors of the Suez Canal Company have decided on increasing the rates charged on vessels passing the canal. From the 1st July the rates will be ten francs on the gross register of every vessel. The difference will be of considerable importance to steamship owners, as many steamers now pass the canal with only half cargoes. The effect will be to necessitate a higher scale of freight, and thus throw the cargo into the hands of sailing-ship owners, whose day, it is clear, is not yet over.—London and China Telegraph.

INDIAN APPEALS.—The case of Syud Fuzl Hossein and others v. Amjud Ally Khan and others was before their lordships on March 25. This was an appeal from Calcutta, dated the 16th of Sept., 1864, and had reference to the purchase of some land. Their lordships, without hearing the respondent's case, dismissed the appeal, with costs. The next day their lordships proceeded to judgment in the case of Shamchand Bysack v. Kishen Prosand Surma. This was an appeal from Calcutta in a litigation matter which had been pending a number of years. It was an ex parte application to set aside a judgment of the High Court. Mr. Leith, who addressed their lordships on two former occasions, was further heard. Sir R. Collier gave the judgment of the committee, dismissing the appeal. Their lordships then adjourned for three weeks.

THE INDIAN ARMY DEFENCE COMMITTEE.—The Indian Army Defence Committee had under deliberation at its weekly sitting on Wednesday a motion to be brought forward in Parliament at an early date after Easter. The Indian officers' Defence Committee, in concert with the members of the Bonus Committee, and with Parliamentary friends, decided to press with energy and without delay for redress in the matter of bonus and some other points, firmly, but with such moderation, as even an official estimate of justice may, perhaps, be willing to concede. The independent and equitable minute of Sir Seymour Fitzgerald, the Governor of Bombay in 1870, in favour of the claims of officers, was carefully considered and approved by the Defence Committee as a State paper, which it will be very difficult for the Government to set aside.—Homeward Mail, March 25.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, March 26.—THE LATE LORD MAYO. —Lord R. GOWER asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there was any probability of the pension granted by Government to Lady Mayo and her children out of the Indian revenue being increased out of the Imperial exchequer.—THE CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER: This question was put on the paper by the noble lord on March 22, but did not come under my notice until the next day. It involves not only a question of the expenditure of money, but of principle, and I should not feel myself justified in answering it according to my own opinion without consulting with my colleagues, which, in the short period I have named, I had no opportunity of doing. Perhaps, therefore, the noble lord will be good enough to repeat his question on some future occasion.—Lord R. GOWER said he would do so after Easter.—Mr. BERNAL OSBORNE gave notice that if an unfavourable reply were given to the above question, he should move on an early day after Easter:—"That this House do resolve itself into a committee of the whole House to consider the propriety of moving an address to the Crown praying that her Majesty will be graciously pleased to bestow some further mark of favour on the widow and children of the late Earl of Mayo, having regard to his eminent services as Viceroy and Governor-General of India, to the munificence with which he maintained in that office the dignity of the Crown, and to his death by a deed of violence to which he was exposed in the discharge of his public duties. (Cheers.) Further, to assure her Majesty that this House will make good the same." (Cheers.)

THE WOOLWICH ACADEMY.—Mr. EASTWICK asked the Secretary of State for War whether the study of Hindostanee had been discontinued in the Military Academy at Woolwich. He omitted the latter part of his question as it appeared on the paper, as he understood that no commissions had been given for distinguished Indian services for the last two years, and that when they were given they were not particularly to regiments serving in India more than to any other. Mr. CARDWELL said the study of Hindostanee had been discontinued owing to a recommendation from the Royal Commission on Military Education, the reason being that, in the opinion of the commissioners, too large a number of subjects of study was unfavourable to the accurate knowledge of any.

PETITIONS PRESENTED.—By Colonel North, from Lieut.-Col. Daniel, Lieut.-Col. Nightingale, Col. G. Carr, and Capt. E. M. Cherry, of her Majesty's Indian Army, praying for compensation for loss of bonus; by Mr. G. Noel, from Major Blagrove, of the 26th Ben. L. I., Capt. Mackenzie, of the 5th Ben. European Lt. Cav., and Lieut.-Col. Vine, Mad. L. Cav., praying for a redress of grievances on principle admitted in Clause 4 of the Army Regulation Bill; by Mr. S. R. Graves, from Capt. C. W. Maynard, Major R. W. Daunt, Lieut.-Col. C. W. Cox, and Major H. Vaughan, of the Indian Army, praying for compensation for loss of regimental bonus; by Col. Anson, from Major Turton, Major Bund, Major Fairlie, and Captain Gillmore, Indian Staff Corps, praying for redress of grievances.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, March 18; Agra and Madras, March 16; Calcutta, March 15.

PROBABLY one of the most sincere mourners for the death of Lord Mayo is the Ameer of Kabul, who, as our agent Ata Mohammed Khan informs the Indian Government, has "expressed the deepest grief at this most deplorable calamity, and continues from time to time to recur to the subject with expressions of sorrow and regret." That there is more in this than meets the eye, may be gathered from the stress laid by the Ameer on his avowed belief that, "as the prosperity of the country which God has given him and that of the British Government are identical, the successor of the late Viceroy will continue to concern himself with the welfare of Afghanistan." We have no doubt that Lord Northbrook will certainly do so, in moderation. If the reported discovery of gold in Afghanistan however should turn out true, we fear that the welfare of that country will become matter of deep concern to many more people than his Lordship.

RAM SINGH, the Kuka leader, was brought down to Calcutta on the 7th March, and quietly shipped off to Rangoon—a wise precaution perhaps in the present state of feeling among his fellow-worshippers, and among Europeans also in the Punjab. Mr. Cowan's proceedings may appear indefensible in Calcutta and Bombay, but in the Punjab they seem to have found no lack of staunch defenders. There is still much uneasiness in that province regarding the Kukas and their designs. At such a time any trifle begets distrust. We are not therefore surprised to hear that the removal of the 14th N.I.—Brassey's Sikhs—from Jullundar to Rawal Pindi, has been ascribed in some quarters to their supposed connection with the Kuka movement. The true explanation however is said to be that they are wanted at Rawal Pindi to replace the 23rd N.I., who have been ordered out roadmaking on the Murree and Abbottabad road. But why, it may be asked, has the 54th Foot been sent to Jullundar? Most likely because Jullundar is a European station.

We are glad to note that the threatening symptoms to which we referred lately, as showing themselves in the Santhal country, have roused the Secretary of State to timely action. Under authority from his Grace the Santhal Pergunnahs have been proclaimed as non-regulation districts; that is, they are placed for the time being under the direct control of the Viceroy himself. It is greatly to be hoped that such an arrangement, which enables the civil officers to deal as it were at first hand with the people among whom they dwell, will result in allaying the discontent which has long been seething among the poor ignorant victims of Hindu oppression, or their own simplicity.

GENERAL POLLOCK and Dr. Bellew reached Kandahar on the 9th February, after a difficult march of 570 miles from the British frontier. There they were met by the Governor of Kandahar, attended by about two hundred of the neighbouring chiefs, who conducted them through lines of Afghan troops, under a salute of fifteen guns, to their appointed resting-place. No expense had been spared, it seems from the Governor's letter to the Ameer, to make the British Commissioners comfortable during their stay at Kandahar.

We regret to hear that Colonel Nassau Lees has been obliged once more to take sick leave to England, so soon after his return to India. We also hear that Sir W. Merewether is about to come home on furlough.

DR. MURRAY THOMPSON, F.R.S.E., one of the Professors at Roorkee College, has just been appointed Chemical Examiner to the Governments of Oudh, the North-Western, and the Central Provinces, in the room of Dr. Christison, Civil Surgeon at Agra. Major Deane, of the 19th Foot, is to be Military Secretary to Sir P. Wodehouse, the new Governor of Bombay. Mr. S. C. Bayley's resignation of his seat in the Bengal Legislative Council has been accepted by the Lieutenant-Governor. Mr. Gay, of the Bengal Finance Department, has started for England in order to help Mr. Harrison in preparing the Indian Revenue Accounts for the Indian Finance Committee. Captain Poole is the new Sanitary Commissioner for British Burmah.

FROM Bengal come good reports of the crops, except in certain districts of Orissa, where the people are reduced to eating grass and roots. Relief works have been opened there. In Oudh the spring crops generally promise a splendid yield, which will serve to compensate the cultivators for their losses of last year. Cholera, we are sorry to hear, has broken out badly in the Central Provinces on the line of the Great Indian Peninsular Railway. That mysterious complaint, the dengue fever, has shown itself at Poonah and Sholapore, brought thither, it is said, by some of the troops which landed in the Crocodile.

THE Indian Evidence Bill, as amended in Committee, has been passed by the Viceroy in Council.

THE telegraph informs us of Lord Northbrook's arrival at Alexandria on the 6th of this month, on his way out to India. As soon as he reaches Calcutta, Lord and Lady Napier of Merchistoun are to start on their homeward voyage. We do not envy them, if they come overland.

ACCORDING to the last annual Report on Port Blair, the number of convicts in that settlement at the beginning of last year was 7,603, of whom 638 were women. Of the whole number, 4,257 were convicted murderers, 1,677 dacoits or highwaymen, and 209 Thugs. In other words, about 85 per cent. are undergoing punishment for crimes of the most violent character. Nearly 13 per cent. of the whole number are self-supporting or on tickets-of-leave. The most refractory of the convicts are sent, as a punishment, to work in heavy irons on Viper Island. To guard these large numbers, there are stationed in the settlement 468 soldiers of whom 113 are English, and 192 police, thus furnishing two guards to every 23 convicts. In spite of all their vigilance however, 87 convicts got away during the year, of whom 37 were never heard of again. During the six years beginning with 1865, the whole number of runaway prisoners amounted to 875; of these, 400 were retaken, 152 returned of their own accord; so that only 323 remained to account for. In all likelihood, the bulk of these last died out at sea, or starved in the jungles, or were killed by the savages who still haunt the latter.

SINCE the last changes in the distribution of India's English garrisons were carried out in 1865, the need for a fresh distribution has been rendered more and more pressing by the subsequent growth of railways, the reductions in the strength of the Indian armies, the building of new barracks, and the reasons which have forced upon the Indian Government the duty of placing as many soldiers as possible in the healthiest possible stations. A new scheme has therefore been sanctioned by the Indian Government, to be carried out with the least practicable delay, so far at least as the cavalry and infantry are concerned. Due regard, of course, must still be paid to political and strategical requirements. Peshawur, for instance, will for the present retain the services of two English regiments; but one of them will ere long be withdrawn to the hills, or some spot less fatal than Peshawur to the health and lives of our troops. Rawul Pindi will hand one infantry regiment over to Murree, receiving in its place one cavalry regiment from Ahmednuggur. One regiment of infantry will be quartered at Nowshera and one of cavalry at Sealkote. Lahore, Ferozepore, and Mooltan will hold one regiment a-piece. So will Jullundur, Subathoo, Dugshai, and Chakrata. To the great plain stations of Umballa and Meerut are allotted severally one regiment of horse and one of foot. The hill station of Ranikhet will take a regiment and a-half of foot. By-and-by, when Roorkee is abolished for British infantry, the wing there stationed will be transferred to Meerut. One regiment of foot a-piece will be quartered in Agra, Bareilly, Fyzabad, Allahabad, Cawnpore, Dinapore, Saugor, Fort William, and Dum-Dum. Two regiments of foot are allotted for the present to Morar, two of foot and one of horse to Lucknow, four companies each to Delhi, Seetapore, Benares, Nowgong, and Jubbulpore. Detachments from the last named and Saugor will pass the hot season at Pachmarhi. Govindghur, Attock, Chunar, Futteh-gurh, and Barrackpore, will be held by detachments from the neighbouring garrisons. The Landour Convalescent Depot is to be removed to Chakrata. On the Madras side no changes are at present contemplated, but in time perhaps a detail from Kamptee will be sent to Pachmarhi. Besides the withdrawal of a cavalry regiment from Ahmednuggur, the Bombay Government are to try an experimental station in the Manderdeo Hills. Provision is thus made for a total strength of thirty-two infantry and six cavalry regiments in the Bengal Presidency, of which three cavalry and thirteen infantry regiments will be retained for the defence of the Punjab alone; five regiments and a-half of foot being reserved to guard the country between Calcutta and Allahabad. For the future distribution of the artillery no arrangement has yet been concluded.

THE Calcutta telegrams in to-day's Times give the main features of Sir R. Temple's Budget Statement, as delivered last Saturday. The expected surplus amounts to £1,482,990 over an expenditure of £49,930,695. According to the "regular estimates" for the past year the surplus should have been £2,700,000. The actual receipts came to £51,413,685, or nearly a million and a half over the estimated receipts, while the ordinary expenditure exceeded the estimates by more than two and a half millions. The outlay on extraordinary public works, estimated at £1,736,800 was in part defrayed by a loan of £1,167,810. The Budget estimates for 1872-73 are—Receipts, £48,771,000, and ordinary expenditure £48,534,000, leaving a surplus of £237,000; extraordinary public works, £2,615,000. The estimated balance in the Treasury on the 31st March last was twenty-one and a-half millions. On the same day of next year it is expected to be 17½ millions.

IN spite of the popular feeling on the subject, the one per cent. income-tax is to be retained for the current year, on all incomes of a thousand rupees and upwards. The rise in the taxable level from Rs. 750 to Rs. 1,000 is a timely concession so far as it goes to the claims of the poorer classes. But it will not satisfy those who object to an income-tax altogether. Sir R. Temple laid stress, it seems, on the support afforded him in this matter by the Secretary of State; but a warm debate appears to have begun in the Legislative Council. Mr. F. Stephen spoke in favour of the tax. Mr. Bullen Smith and some of his colleagues strongly objected to pass the tax until all the papers bearing on the subject have been laid before the Council. Eventually the Tax Bill was laid upon the table and the regular discussion upon it fixed for the 16th instant.

THE Administrative Report on the Bengal Presidency for last year contains some pointed remarks on the "embarrassments" caused by the prolonged absence of the Nawab of Moorshe-dabad in England. Nothing, it seems, can be done towards settling the affairs of the Nizamat and liquidating debts which "now amount to a heavy sum," before his Highness's return. The Bengal authorities have therefore suggested that the Supreme Government should communicate with the princely truant, "advising his speedy return." We are not aware if the advice has been offered, nor have we heard of any consequent action on his Highness's part. Why his presence should be so urgently desired in India is more than we can guess. Cannot the affairs of his sham principality be settled without him? It is rather hard that a prince of his pretensions may not take his pleasures in his own way wherever he likes to tarry for that purpose. His freedom would of course be limited by the depth of his purse and the extent of his credit. On the latter point it would hardly do to venture an opinion, in view of the middle-class Briton's proverbial readiness to put his faith in princes. But so far as the Indian Government are concerned, his Highness's powers of spending may be measured by the amount of his yearly pension. If Bengal is really languishing for his return, the likeliest way of hastening that event would be to stop his allowances after a certain date.

IN a little piece now being performed by Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's clever little company, one of the characters resents the indignity of being called a photographer, and insists on dubbing himself a photographic artist. Much in the same way a correspondent of the Times of India calls the idea of a Wahabi conspiracy to blow the English Government into the air an "hallucination," and then proceeds to show the extent of his own belief in something very like that hallucination:—

There may be disaffection: in fact, there is widespread discontent, and when there is widespread discontent there is certain to be a considerable amount of disaffection; but I do not believe in the conspiracy theory, for the plain and sensible reason that I think the real leaders of the Mahomedan community are not at all so ignorant or foolish as they are made to appear. The friends of Ameer Khan were, and are, naturally, very hostile to a Government who instituted proceedings which not only they, but the whole Mahomedan community, think were something very like persecution. Well, suppose even that they (the friends) resolved to take revenge in some way or other. However horrible the means adopted might be, I see nothing extraordinary in it.

Having just before said that he didn't believe a word of any alleged plot, he goes on to admit the likelihood of a plot to avenge on the Viceroy the punishment inflicted on Ameer Khan. It must be a curious state of mind which sees "nothing extraordinary" in such an issue from the admitted prevalence of particular feelings, and yet flatly disbelieves in "the conspiracy theory." As the same writer complains of Mr. George Campbell for not sending Mr. Wauchope to Patna, "the very headquarters of the conspirators," our bewilderment as to his real meaning remains unrelieved.

THE unfortunate shareholders of the old Bank of Bombay are circulating among the members of the House of Commons a statement of their case against the Government of India, as a prelude to the motion which Mr. Gregory is to bring forward early next month. The case contains in two dozen pages a succinct review of the circumstances which ended in the failure of a Bank established under a State Charter, and controlled to a certain extent by Government officers. Founded on the evidence taken and the Report drawn up by Sir C. Jackson's Commission of Enquiry, the document in question contains nothing new to those who followed the proceedings in Bombay and England. So much however has happened in the meantime, that the present pamphlet may help to remind some of us of the steps by which a flourishing institution came to grief through the shortcomings of its appointed overseers. Not a few of those for whose special guidance it was written will probably have learned for the first time how largely the failure of the Bombay Bank was owing to the insertion, in its new charter, of a clause empowering its directors to lend money on the shares of any public company whatsoever. How such a clause was inserted spite of Sir C. Wood's instructions and the very different wording of the Bengal Bank Charter; how the Bill thus tampered with passed the Bombay Legislature, and received the sanction first of the Indian Government and then of Sir C. Wood himself, although his attention had been drawn to the offending clause; how the door thus opened to any amount of reckless gambling was freely used for that purpose by the directors and their friends, until no more money was left to gamble with, are all facts for which chapter and verse may easily be called in evidence. From the Government Directors who helped in playing ducks and drakes with the Bank's capital to the Secretary of State who with open eyes sanctioned the very folly he had once by anticipation denounced, every member or servant of the Government who had aught to do with the Bank's proceedings appears to have aided in ruining its luckless shareholders with a perverseness only possible during a great commercial craze. All Bombay went mad in 1863 and 1864, and the Government also passed under the spell. The mischief was intensified by the efforts of the Bombay Government to stave off the inevitable crash, which reduced numbers of their helpless servants to sudden poverty. In all equity they must be held responsible for the great bulk of the losses inflicted on the shareholders, who would now appeal to Parliament for a final hearing of their very hard case.

SOME of our Indian contemporaries have lately been showing their freedom from vulgar prejudice on the side of humanity, by proposing a variety of horrible punishments for future assassins of Englishmen in high places. In view of an event so startling as the murder of Lord Mayo, our countrymen may perhaps be excused for seeking to mould their penal processes after the native Indian pattern, or the rough and ready cruelties practised by white men on the borders of the United States. Cruelty is catching, and the modern Briton under circumstances of special provocation betrays a wonderful resemblance to his ruder forefathers in the days of the Plantagenets. Public opinion however is hardly yet ripe for a new Indian version of the horrible scenes depicted by the author of Titus Andronicus; and a good many people doubtless share the objection, raised by Mr. R. Elliot in the last number of Fraser, to the more refined indignities practised on the body of Mr. Norman's murderer. In burning his body, the Government, thinks that writer, "showed in the eyes of the people a ferocious desire to injure the prospects of the deceased in a future state." So far from acting as a deterrent, this addition to the capital sentence is even supposed in some quarters to have helped in bringing about the murder of the Viceroy who sanctioned the same. Something however may yet have to be done to prevent the spreading of a taste for assassination. Mr. Elliot's remedy, however powerful, has at least the merit of being neither savagely brutal nor studiously insulting. He would lose no time in stamping out Wahabism. "It should be proclaimed from one end of India to the other that anyone convicted of treason will be hanged, the whole of his kith and kin banished, and the possessions of the family forfeited to the State." Such a penalty would no doubt make strong appeal to the household instincts of many a plotter who, however reckless of his own life, would shrink from involving his family in a common ruin. All such questions apart however, cannot the rulers of India devise some better means than heretofore of forestalling the attempts of Wahabi plotters? A well-organised detective service under picked officers like Sleeman of old would go far to avert the necessity for "heroic" legislation.

It has been given out, we suppose on good authority, that Prince Arthur will shortly proceed to India as a Major in the Rifle Brigade, for a term of two years' service with his regiment in that country. His Royal Highness has always been conspicuous for the steady performance of his regimental duties. If his health should allow him to discharge those duties during the height of an Indian summer, his visit to India will not have been undertaken in vain.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MR. TORRENS AS THE DEVIL'S ADVOCATE.

MR. W. M. TORRENS'S "Book of Confessions," as he is pleased to call his clever but gloomy retrospect of Anglo-Indian history, is a wonderful instance of that morbid philanthropy which impels some men to take the darkest possible views of all public matters transacted by their own countrymen in former days.* The story of British conquest in India must, like all such tales, unfold a succession of good and evil deeds, of characters good, bad, or indifferent, of incidents not always pleasing to modern ideas of justice and humanity. There are not a few chapters of Anglo-Indian history which some of us might wish unwritten altogether, or in part; hardly one perhaps from which one or two unpleasant passages might not have been with advantage struck out. But Mr. Torrens, in his survey of the past, can find no redeeming feature in our policy from the day when our forefathers first set foot in India to that when Lord Canning annexed the little State of Dhar. The four hundred pages of his well-written volume form one long indictment against the men who built up our Indian Empire. Of all the great names that light up the pages of any history of British India, from Clive to Canning, one only, that of Lord William Bentinck, comes forth with undimmed lustre from Mr. Torrens's unsparing hands. Even the blameless Lord Hardinge receives a black mark for his share in punishing Sikh aggression after the victory of Sohraon. As for the rest, they only differ from each other as very black differs from dark brown. Clive and Warren Hastings, as a matter of course, appear as sinners of the deepest dye, and next to them in order of guilt come the three Marquises, Wellesley, Hastings, and Dalhousie. Very little mercy is shown to Cornwallis himself, whose league with the Maráthas and the Nizam against Tippoo is found to offer a very close analogy with the league of 1795 between Austria, Russia, and Prussia, for the dismemberment of Poland. Of minor actors on the Indian stage, such as Malcolm, Munro, and Metcalfe, the same cruel censor writes in terms of almost equal disparagement. It seems much as if Burke's fierce enthusiasm had lent something of its lurid glow to a condensed edition of James Mill.

We hear the keynote struck in the very first pages of the book. Mr. Torrens takes a curious delight in laying bare the secret motives which may have inspired the earlier dealings of his countrymen with the natives of India. He even argues from a few stray facts of doubtful import, that the worst things done by the servants of the infant Company can never be made known. Before the close of the seventeenth century, the Company of Merchants trading to the East had already, in his opinion, formed those schemes of conquest which their successors learned so unscrupulously to fulfil. In the progress of that quarrel between the Company's agents and the Nawabs of Bengal, which led to the horrors of the Black Hole, Mr. Torrens can see nothing but the workings of English greed and treachery. It is always our people who are in fault. The attack on Chittagong in 1865 is treated as a piece of wanton aggression. The desire of the Company to establish their footing in India as a recognised "nation," not a mere body of casual interlopers, Mr. Torrens twists into a deliberate plan for conquering the country with which they professed to trade. Blind as his comments on English wrong-doing would show him to be to the differences between the ethical standards of one century and another, he can extenuate deeds of cruelty done by native Indians on Englishmen by a reference to like atrocities inflicted by Scotchmen upon Scotchmen more than half a century before the affair of the Black Hole. It is well of course to bear in mind what happened under William III. at Glencoe; and it is possible that Surajuddowlah had no direct share in stifling 123 English prisoners to death in a cell only eighteen feet square. But the same application of historical methods might at least have served to extenuate many of the misdeeds Mr. Torrens lays at the door of Warren Hastings and his contemporaries, living as they did in an age when the moral sense of Englishmen at home was much less refined and exacting than it appears to be now.

The spirit in which Mr. Torrens pours out his "confessions" naturally leads him to set the worst possible interpretation upon every doubtful act committed by the first and perhaps the ablest of Indian Viceroy, Warren Hastings. If even Macaulay was too free with his shadows in the portraiture of Burke's great victim, Mr. Torrens admits not a single ray of redeeming light. All the atrocious slanders which the most unscrupulous of slanderers, Sir Philip Francis, could hatch for his opponent's ruin, seem to be accepted in good faith by a writer who even goes the length of comparing Hastings with so mere a scoundrel as Nuncomar. If he wanted a parallel for the latter he would have found at least a fitter one in the author of "Junius's Letters," a man whose literary fame has helped to screen his memory from the loathing of all honourable men. There are passages in the career of Hastings which shock, no doubt, the moral sense of the present day; but by the side of Francis, whose poisonous rancour furnished Burke and Sheridan with the weapons they used so skilfully, yet to so little purpose, he stands forth an angel of light; and very few men of his day subject to like temptations would probably have come out with hands so clean. It is certain that he for one never stooped to enrich himself with the petty plunder on which Francis himself built up the very considerable fortune he carried home. Mr. Torrens's sympathies however are reserved, not for the ruler who reformed the whole administrative system of Bengal, put down corruption where he could with a strong hand, and took no small interest in the wellbeing of his native subjects; but for the stronghanded Rohillas whom he consigned, perhaps too readily, to the tender mercies of the Nawab of Oudh.

It is the same with his estimate of the career of later Viceroy. He lets his polished sarcasms play freely about Wellesley and Lord Hastings, while Tippoo and the Maráthas are painted almost as highminded patriots fighting for their fatherland.

A more impartial student of Indian history would have given our countrymen credit for wise forecast in their average dealings with native princes, whose dreams of empire involved not much regard for the rights and happiness of the native millions. It was no loss for Southern India to get freed by English aid from the heavy yoke of such ambitious usurpers as Hyder Ali and Tippoo; nor could the people at large in Hindustan have felt aught but gratitude to those who delivered them from the "iron scourge and torturing hour" of Marátha ascendancy. In the last days of Moghul rule it was simply a question which of several claimants should fill the Moghul's place, and it was only natural that Warren Hastings and his successors should do their best to win for their own country a prize so coveted. Keen in detecting any wrong done to a native prince, Mr. Torrens remains curiously blind to the good which native peoples derived from English interference. His misplaced zeal fastens upon the subsidiary system applied by successive Viceroy to the Native States, as if it formed part of a cunningly devised scheme for getting rid of one Native State after another. Whatever were the ultimate fruits of such a system, it is clear enough that the principle of forming native contingents, officered by Englishmen, and available in time of war for English needs, seemed at one time to offer the best safeguard for the peace of India and the permanence of the native dynasties. No one will deny that such a system was "obviously meant and felt, if not in public words declared, to be a guarantee against the development of schemes hostile to English interests, and the growth of English ascendancy." Anglo-Indian statesmen would have been fools indeed not to take due precautions in their own behalf. But to accuse them, as Mr. Torrens does, of a deep-laid conspiracy to overthrow native dynasties under a fine show of interference for their good, is surely to betray a curious ignorance of the mixed motives which usually influence human conduct, as well as an obstinate blindness to the circumstances of a very peculiar time.

It would take a volume larger than his own to explode all the fallacies started or taken up by the author of these confessions. Even when the facts appear to be most strongly on his side, Mr. Torrens is not content with what can be fairly got out of them. The conquest of Sindh for example would have furnished Burke himself with full excuse for any amount of his indignant rhetoric. "Coming," as Elphinstone said, "after Afghanistan, it put one in mind of a bully who had been kicked in the streets, and went home to beat his wife in revenge." But even Lord Ellenborough could show decent cause for invading Gwalior, and the only blame attachable to Lord Hardinge for his war against the Sikhs was his utter unreadiness to meet their first attacks. We should like to know on what grounds Mr. Torrens ignores the evidence incriminating Moolraj in the acts that led to the murder of Vans Agnew and Anderson. And why, in the name of common sense, should Lord Dalhousie be vilified for annexing the Punjab, and setting up a strong, orderly, and mild rule in the place of a Prætorian sovereignty already falling to pieces? Mr. Torrens's reading of the events that led up to the conquest of Pegu seems to be founded on the curious criticisms supplied by Cobden. In the same spirit he goes to Major Bell for the means of denouncing Dalhousie's policy towards Oudh. It need hardly be added that his account of the great Viceroy's share in the annexation of that province—itsself for half a century a virtual fief of the Indian Government—differs materially from the true one. We have said that this volume needs another to refute it in detail; but after all a reader of any shrewdness will find its refutation in itself. So clearly does the note of partisanship ring throughout it, that even those who are least acquainted with Indian history will be able to pick out for themselves a good many flaws in the author's reasoning from his own premisses.

Correspondence.

THE TENDENCIES OF THE BRAHMO SOMAJ. TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Since you attach sufficient importance to the "suggestive" paper of "R. E. E.," in the March number of Fraser's Magazine, to give an epitome of its contents, will you permit me to reply to its main charges against Mr. Sen and the Brahma Somaj? The writer appears to know scarcely anything of Brahmoism except from the speeches of Mr. Sen in England, and of those his knowledge must be very small, judging by his abundant misconceptions of Mr. Sen's meaning. He begins by an account of the religious service conducted by Mr. Sen at South-place Chapel on Whit-Sunday, 1870, which, though not quite accurate in detail, and omitting one of the most striking features of the sermon, is tolerably just as a whole. Then comes an epitome of the previous meeting held at the Hanover-square Rooms, to welcome Mr. Sen, followed by "R. H. E.'s" criticisms thereupon.

1. He complains that Mr. Sen had the pretension to express the gratitude of his country for the blessings of British rule—a gratitude which the writer evidently thinks could only have been credited by a sentimental English audience bent on lion-worshipping. He may not be aware that for years past Mr. Sen has been accustomed to express that gratitude before large native audiences in India; and that, shortly before starting for England, he delivered a farewell lecture on "England and India" at the Town Hall of Calcutta, before a crowded audience of 1,500 persons of all creeds and colours, in which he detailed his views on the relations between the two countries, and stated the objects of his visit to England. And the reception he met with was certainly such as to encourage him in the course he marked out.

2. Next, "R. H. E." complains of Mr. Sen's high estimate of the material resources of India, and says, pointing to the over-taxation of the country which drains its resources so terribly—"Chunder Sen's 'great future of material prosperity' is simply an impossibility, if we continue to hold India and govern it as we do at present." Does "R. H. E." suppose that the latter of these conditions is assumed by patriotic Hindoos to be an irreversible fact of nature, or that they regard the present blunders of Anglo-Indian financiers as the permanent state of things, and the abundant material riches of their country as destined to be eternally overshadowed thereby? Natives of a land that had long been civilised "when in the woods the British savage ran," are not likely to narrow their anticipations to such a limited outlook, and they may do us the honour to believe that even Anglo-Saxon rulers can learn by experience. "R. H. E." may be consoled by the information that his own trenchant exposures of "John's Indian Affairs" have been quoted with approval in the Indian Mirror, the Calcutta daily organ of the Brahmo Somaj, which, during its ten years' existence, has, though heartily loyal, never been wont to ignore the sins and shortcomings of the Indian Government.

3. "R. H. E." next observes that when Mr. Sen "said that the greatest achievement of all had been the religious and moral reformation of the country, he was equally wide of the truth." Now Mr. Sen did not say that either religious or moral reformation in India had resulted from the direct or conscious efforts of England (except from private and missionary influence), and he has never maintained such a view. The first English tract he published, in 1860 ("Young Bengal") especially dwelt on the mischiefs of the purely negative character of Government education in India, and it has been a frequent theme with him ever since. What he did say on this point in England was that "the effect of English education was marvellous and encouraging, not only from its direct results, but what was of greater importance—its indirect effects were moral and social reformation." ("Keshub Chunder Sen's English Visit," p. 373.) For the direct dealing with moral and religious life it is notorious to anyone who knows anything of Mr. Sen that he looks to religion, and (for obvious reasons) chiefly to the teaching of the Brahmo Somaj. But he knows that for this movement English education has been, at least for the leaders of Brahmoism, an indispensable preliminary. "Wherever there were English schools," he said on another occasion, "Brahmo Somajes were established as a necessary consequence of English education." ("English Visit," p. 301.) In the Brahmo Somaj "the indirect effects of education and missionary labour had been concentrated." (Ibid, p. 374.) What the Brahmo Somaj has done to promote the moral and religious reformation of India cannot be summarised in a sentence, but that enough has been achieved to attest the existence of a real power acting in that direction may be fearlessly asserted.

4. Passing by the less important objections of "R. H. E.," I must say a few words on his defence of caste. He concedes that all Indian reformers, from Buddha downwards, have combated this institution, but he thinks that they were all in the wrong. Caste "is a great temperance society," and although many of its customs are absurd, yet, "as an encouragement of abstemiousness, and as thence a guardian of public morals, it cannot be too carefully cherished." To preach its destruction is (he implies) a kind of red Socialism, a "pulling down those in high places, and reducing them to the social level of the masses," which "is sure to prove a welcome signal, and appease for the moment the vanity of the multitude," but which must be deplored by sensible men. Now the institution of caste is one of multifarious aspects, and acts in an infinite variety of directions. That some of its prohibitions are based upon nature and morality is doubtless true, but this is not enough to prove that "it cannot be too carefully cherished," unless it will bear investigation as a whole, and such is certainly not the case in the opinion of enlightened Indians. There can be no possible doubt that its influence is to disintegrate Indian society,—to restrict men to small cliques, and to raise fictitious barriers between persons of the same general conditions of life, nay, between old friends, and between children of the same parents, if one of them has broken any of its superstitious rules. Mr. Lyall's instructive paper in the Fortnightly Review for last February, "On the Religion of an Indian Province," presents a striking picture of the curious process by which castes and sub-castes are multiplied, and a "continual piecemeal dissection by religious anarchy of the body politic" takes place. A more pernicious system could scarcely be imagined. And as for the "socialism" implied in the act of defying it, the charge is simply untrue. One of my Brahmo friends was out-casted because his elder brother refused to join in an idolatrous pūja; another, because he took a meal with a gentleman of Mahometan birth; and a third is now under the displeasure of his caste-fellows on account of his recent visit to England. Such cases might be multiplied by hundreds, and they have nothing to do with any question of rank or culture, but are simply instances of taboo. I suspect that the new fashion of patronising caste which has lately appeared among Anglo-Indian writers is owing to their dislike of anything that is advocated by Christian missionaries. That many of the teachings and proceedings of the missionaries have been marked by narrowness and indiscretion no candid observer can doubt; but to leap to the conclusion that whatever the missionaries approve must be narrow, and whatever they denounce must be useful, is a most unjust reaction. Yet this bias showed itself very plainly in England some years ago in reference to American slavery, where missionary Christianity had certainly got hold of a thoroughly sound principle; and the same bias appears to be at work now as respects the less understood question of caste. That all native Indian reformers, of all creeds and colours, from 500 B.C. to 1872 A.D., have declared against the institution signifies nothing, for are not the Christian missionaries on the same side, and can any good come out of Nazareth?

5. But the worst feature in "R. H. E.'s" paper is his complete misrepresentation of the religious and political tendencies of the Brahmo Somaj. He considers that the Hindoos "are naturally sick of us and of our Government," and "cannot but look upon it as a singularly unfortunate circumstance that, at such a conjuncture, the spirit which has resulted in the Brahmo Somaj should be rapidly extending. That spirit is an inquisitorial and sceptical spirit. Its first step has been to march to the attack of religion, its second will be to march on to a consideration of the justice of our Government in India." And when the Brahmos enlighten their countrymen on their wrongs, "when all these things become known, as one day they assuredly will be, there will arise a deep-seated feeling of universal hatred, which will surely make itself felt." The Wahabis and Mahometans are but "as chaff, compared to that spirit of which the new Theism is the living fruit."

This picture is so extravagantly wide of the mark that one can scarcely be seriously indignant at it, but considering the prevalent ignorance of Brahmoism, it is necessary to reply that so far from "marching to the attack of religion," there is, perhaps, no man living who has a more intense faith in God than Keshub Chunder Sen, or who has done more to spread that faith among his fellow men. "The new Theism" is not Atheism, nor is it merely, as "R. H. E." elsewhere implies, a sort of esoteric rationalism, fitted only for "a certain number of highly-educated, strong-minded men." "R. H. E.'s" description of the religious iconoclasts does in some respects answer to the "Young Bengal" party, with whom he seems to have confounded the Brahmos. They are, however, very different in tendency and tone. The Brahmo Somaj is not a sect of sceptics, but a Church of believers, who desire to bring in the Kingdom of God, and who aim, not to disintegrate, but to reconstruct Indian society on pure foundations. For proof of these statements, I need only appeal to the history and literature of Brahmoism.

As to the attitude of the Brahmo Somaj to our Government, "R.H.E." seems to perceive no alternative between servile submission and "social rebellion." If he were to study the political writings and speeches of the Brahmos, he would see that the process of enlightenment on Indian grievances which he predicts has fully set in; but he would also see that other lessons have been learned from England at the same time—viz., the respect for constitutional methods of seeking redress, the desire to be just to political opponents, the ambition to act like reasonable patriots, and not like insurgent savages. Let me conclude by quoting a recent instance of this manly loyalty from the conclusion of Mr. Sen's speech at a large Calcutta meeting on the Brahmo Marriage Bill.

It ought to be an established maxim in Indian legislation that whoever wishes to do that which is right must have the sanction and protection of the British Government. But should this maxim be neglected or violated, should the Bill be shelved for the present, let us resolutely go on doing our duty in a loyal spirit. Her Majesty the Queen can nowhere find more loyal hearts than in the Brahmo Somaj. (Cheers from the native audience.) The heart that beats within us is full of loyalty and devotion to her name, and gratefully associates it with the many valuable advantages that have accrued to us from her rule. Let us, then, earnestly but respectfully continue to represent our grievances to Government, and keep up constitutional agitation till the relief needed be obtained.

I remain, Sir, yours, &c.,

S. D. COLLET.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—When the future historian shall write the decline and fall of the British Empire in India, he will probably attribute much of the derangement of the political and official machinery to the multiplication of departments, which are practically uncontrolled, and without responsibility; which often impede instead of assisting the machinery of Government; which facilitate favouritism without the fear of public exposure; which wink at sinecures; and, worst of all, which weight the finances with so enormous a pension list as finally to sink the ship of the State.

The department, which is the subject of the present letter, is the Canal Department. We all know that water is the want of India, even more so than railways are; that it prevents famines, gives occupation to the unemployed, keeps the small farmer out of the hands of the usurer, and converts the howling desert into the smiling garden. Every proposition then for irrigation works is sure to be welcomed with enthusiasm in India, and with satisfaction in England.

But our Canal Department is badly organised and managed. Expensive works are undertaken without due consideration, and our canal officers are entrusted with duties which they are not qualified, and cannot be expected, to perform satisfactorily.

1st. In selecting works to be undertaken, we have neglected to consider that canals ought to be constructed where water is scarce and expensive, and where irrigation is most required, and will be most remunerative. Why should we neglect the country west of the Jumna and south of the Sutlej, where every pint of water is precious? Why should we lavish our money in making canals in Northern Oudh, where we have too much water already, and where the chief return for treasures expended will be in the shape of fevers, and in deterioration of the soil by the appearance of reh, which name is given to the carbonate as well as to the sulphate of soda?

2nd. We entrust to our canal officers duties which they do not perform satisfactorily; we entrust them with the power of taxation. The present canal arrangements are the cause of constant irritation among the loyal agricultural community in many parts of the country, but especially in the Punjab, where it has been the aim of our wisest statesmen from Sir Henry Lawrence downwards to cherish contentment and respect for the British Government. On both sides of the Indus the agricultural community is at present attached to us; the land revenue is light, and the extent of cultivation has enormously increased; but the Canal Department is destroying the effect produced by a wise policy towards a Mohammedan population, whose active assistance has been and will be invaluable to us in times of war, and whose hatred would shake the foundations of the Empire.

Complaints are made that the Canal Department pays little attention to ancient customs, or to the rights of the people. They have in places put on a water-rate of ten annas (1s. 3d.) to the acre on all lands irrigated and cultivated, and half rates on grass lands. In many villages these rates amount to much more than the Government revenue; the Department has lowered beds of canals so as to deprive lands of surface irrigation without giving a penny compensation. The water rates often eat up all the profits caused by irrigation; their collection is attended with much discontent and heart-burning, and the receipts realised are sometimes entirely swallowed up by the salaries of the Canal Department. While European officers in this department enjoy large salaries, the native officers, on whom so much of the success of the system depends, are miserably paid. The sum of £48 a-year is considered very high pay for native functionaries, on whose reports losses or profits may be caused to the extent of thousands of pounds. The district officers and the Canal authorities are often at variance, and disunion among British officers is sure to lead to maladministration, and to peculation, bribery, and extortion by natives.

The power of taxation should without delay be withdrawn from the Canal Department, whose officers should be confined to their proper work, the management of the water supply.—Your obedient servant, T.

HOSPITALITY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Englishmen have ever been famed for the substantial character of their repasts, a peculiarity, no doubt, inherited by them from Saxon ancestors, whose rude but hospitable boards were, on days of public rejoicing, or family merry-making, wont to groan under the weight of animals roasted whole, and of massy flaggons of mead and wassail.

The remembrance of this custom is still kept up at Christmas by their Sovereigns, save that the baron of beef is the less imposing representative of the Brobdignag dishes of their ancestors, and that the sparkling juice of the grape replaces the heavier and more heterogenous but less intoxicating compound of sugar, ale, apples, and spices.

A like spirit of conviviality and good fellowship is still to be found among the various public bodies throughout the United Kingdom, but more especially those of the City of London, including its twelve Companies, and until its dissolution in 1858, the late East India Company. But among the regales given by these corporations, none excelled, if any equalled, those of the last mentioned company, whether in the delicacy and recherché character of the viands, the variety and richness of the wines, or the splendour and magnificence of the tout ensemble.

Now, Sir, when it is considered that in the Indian mind an idea of grandeur and dignity is ever associated with that of high official station, nothing could be more politic than for the company to throw around their representative, "the man whom they delight to honour," a halo of esteem, eulogy, and confidence, as expressed at such reunions in commendation of the party selected for their representative in the land of the Babers and the Akbars. But now, unfortunately, tempora mutantur, and in obedience to a cheese-paring, candle-ends' niggardliness, misnamed economy, the representative of the Mistress of an Empire on which the sun never sets is whisked away to the seat of Government shorn of all prestige, and with no more pride and pomp of circumstance than that with which a diplomatic agent is despatched to some petty South American republic, or a vice-consul is sent to Dahomey or Jaddah. Would an Indian, I would ask, believe it possible that Lord Northbrook, having kissed hands at Windsor, was suffered to leave the Castle without having been invited to dinner, or even offered a sandwich and a glass of Bass's wherewith to wet his whistle?

Surely it is high time, for England's credit, that such mean and churlish parsimony should be sent to "the right about," and replaced by that spirit of generosity and munificence the example of which was set by the now extinct Company Bahadoor.—Your obedient servant,

April 5.

SYED ABDOOLAH.

DEATH OF LIEUTENANT HUSKISSON.—We regret to learn of the death of Lieutenant Huskisson, Adjutant 70th Foot, on his way from Rawul Pindie to Murree, whither he had been ordered for change, in consequence of fever. Two officers of the same battalion are also suffering from fever, but it is expected they will recover.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

The Indian Observer thinks that, so far from advocating an increase to the Covenanted Service, every consideration, both of policy and finance, should lead the Government to seek for its speedy abolition on its present basis. The sole reason we can find for maintaining the anomaly of a close service in the present day is the necessity in India of having men under training for those offices in the administration which must be filled by experienced Englishmen. The admission of natives to the Covenanted Service has destroyed, to our idea, its whole raison d'être. We go further even than the Secretary of State in advocating the employment of native agency. But we see no sense in maintaining an expensive privileged service for the performance of the ordinary work of the country. We would rigorously define the offices that must, in virtue of the tenure on which we hold India, be filled by Englishmen of ability who consent to devote their lives to Indian work. For the due supply of these offices we would keep up a limited Covenanted Service, the appointments in which should be given either, as now, by competition in England to European British subjects only, or, better still, be awarded as university prizes. A service one-third the present strength would be ample for all purposes. All other appointments, including the whole judicial service, should be thrown open to competition in this country, a preference being given to natives, and salaries being fixed and leave rules framed mainly with a view to their employment. The Educational Department would perhaps have to be treated exceptionally, but only for a time. We are convinced that, so far from accepting the enormously expensive and useless extension of the Covenanted Service proposed by the Duke of Argyll, supreme considerations of financial necessity will very soon force the Government of India to some such measures as we have suggested. It is the duty of every man who lays claim to forethought to give them his hearty support. We have no space left to show how the present service may be reduced to reasonable numbers. Suffice it to say that a scheme permitting retirement without medical certificate on reduced pensions before the close of service would get rid of many disappointed and useless men, and would prove in the end far less costly to Government than the prospect now before it.

THE HON. MR. GEORGE CAMPBELL.

The Pioneer dissents from those who think Mr. George Campbell an ambitious man. They are wrong; Mr. George Campbell has no objection to getting on; but it is by no means the sole object of his life. Notoriety is almost as sweet to him as success, and he is not at all particular as to the line in which he attains it. It is indispensable to him that he be talked of, but not that he be praised. He has very clear and decided convictions, and the strongest inclination to act upon them. These convictions are moreover entirely his own; hence if they are sometimes eccentric, their originality is unquestionable. So much so that if Mr. George Campbell had one idea which he had the smallest suspicion was borrowed, however sound it might be, we believe he would reject it on the spot. If Mr. Campbell believe in little else, he believes implicitly in himself. Nor is his belief altogether a delusion and a snare. Mr. George Campbell is clever—undoubtedly clever; but his cleverness, though striking, is of a character much more likely to mar than to make his reputation. On the whole we would classify him as a restless and impulsive rather than an "ambitious" man. His two most prominent characteristics are impulsiveness and restlessness, which lead him not only to desire to reform every thing, but actually to attempt to carry his wishes into effect; while the latter impels him, in spite of himself, to enter upon fresh reforms before he has had time even to reflect upon those he has already undertaken. His foible is omniscience. He will dash off a minute upon opium, salt, or land tenures, in India or in any other part of the known world, at a quarter of an hour's notice. He will undertake to read a lecture before the Royal Society upon ethnology, psychology, comparative philology, or any other ology; upon astronomy and the corona, botany and the cholera germ, optics and the speculum, diseases of the British Constitution and the hip-joint—or any mortal or immortal thing, in a week. Such a man must have a considerable amount of moral courage, and Mr. George Campbell is endowed with this quality in an eminent degree. He is perpetually "rushing in where angels fear to tread." Nothing is too great, too arduous, or too hazardous for his indomitable spirit. He has already abolished the Urdu language; the Bengali language has been warned and trembles; and if he goes on at his present pace, it may be truly, as it has lately been facetiously said of him that—

—Campbell will soon
Move to abolish the Sun and the Moon.

And yet, though we may appear to indulge in a little pleasant sarcasm at Mr. Campbell's expense, we have no desire to speak harshly or unkindly of him. On the contrary, we have much admiration for Mr. George Campbell, and not for his courage only. We admire him for his perseverance, his originality, and his energy. In his impulsiveness we see the exuberance of his zeal for the public service. His ideas, too, of reform generally take a right direction; and he is only prevented from completing one because he is in such a desperate hurry to begin another. Above all, we admire him because we believe him to be thoroughly honest. If Mr. George Campbell will only be more discreet in his measures, more thoughtful in the preparation of his notes and minutes, and will write fewer of them, and less quixotic in his tilts and tournaments against his own service, we think it probable that he will rise above even his present position and certainly above his present reputation.

JUDICIAL GOVERNMENT.

The Englishman admits that there is a great deal too much of "judicial government" in India. We have laid regulation upon regulation, and Act upon Act; we have built up a highly technical system of procedure; we have gone out of our way to define rights which have only been doubtful since we took their explanation in hand; and, generally, we have inaugurated what the natives call the "Vakil's Raj." The plain questions of right and wrong are confused by a multitude of technicalities; and, what with circulars, constructions, and rulings, few know how they are to get their rights acknowledged. With the Englishman's fixed idea, that what is good for England must be good for India, we have introduced many a useless innovation, and imposed many a weary burthen; we have created a system under which the smaller holdings of land have passed almost entirely into the hands of the money-lender or the attorney, and which seems to care little for justice, unless it be dispensed according to form and statement. For the last twenty years at least we have been endeavouring to govern India "judicially," and we quite agree with Mr. Campbell that the result is not encouraging. The worst of it is that the natives, for whom we are making all these exertions, for whose benefit we keep up no less than four legislative councils, and no end of highly "systematised" courts, are not in the least grateful. It was supposed that they would be glad to have a court of justice, civil or criminal, near them! Quite the contrary. They prefer settling their affairs out of Court, and saving the fees of pleaders and cost of stamps; and, as a general rule, ordinary petty criminal charges are rarely preferred but from motives of vengeance, when something more than redress is wanted. The people as a mass were much happier before their paternal Government took so much pains to make them happy. They managed very well when there was no civil court nearer than the Sadr Station, and we may depend upon it that they are not grateful for the so-called improvements we have forced upon them. We have little doubt that the majority have sometimes a kind of longing for the good old days of Mahratta or Moslem rule, when, if life and property were rather insecure, there were at least but few State taxes, and those well known and easily collected. Life is not thought much of in India even now, but a method of taxation which seems to be always changing and never ending is a weariness of the flesh which sooner or later gets too hard to bear. It is the old complaint over again—we legislate for Asiatics as we should do for our own countrymen. We give them what we suppose to be blessings; we place them on juries; we build courts close to their doors; we sow magistrates and munsifs broadcast over the land; we fence in the people's rights by a most elaborate and complicated hedge of legal difficulties, and then we wonder that they don't care for these things, but prefer being let alone. The mistake we have made for the last quarter of a century has been, not "letting them alone." Why should we insist on governing them judicially if they had rather not? Why should we be continually dinning into their ears the advantages of our ways when our ways are not their ways? It is, we believe, perfectly true that the feelings of the natives of this country have undergone an immense change towards their rulers within the last twenty years. There used to be something which might have easily passed for love between them, but who will say that it is so now? In very remote parts of the country, where the non-regulation system has kept out a good many of our so-called improvements, the feeling may still exist; but generally the English Government has become an embodiment of rules and regulations, combined with a strong mixture of appeals and taxes. It is with ninety-nine out of a hundred the "Raj of the Vakil," and we quite sympathise with Mr. Campbell's desire to prevent any extension of the system.

THE NATIVE MARRIAGE BILL.

The Englishman thinks it somewhat strange that the proposal to legalise the marriages of persons who have abandoned their original religions, without embracing Christianity, should be viewed by a portion of the Legislative Council as a dangerous innovation, and should be opposed as a dangerous blow at the social fabric and established religions. It would be impossible more completely to misrepresent the true purport of the measure. So far from being revolutionary, it is, in fact, timidly conservative. Whereas Lord Lawrence, probably the most experienced and sagacious official of his day, sanctioned the introduction of a Civil Marriage Bill, which was to be universally applicable; the present Bill leaves all the established religions abso-

Bengal.

THE QUESTION OF GAUGE IN INDIA.

The following has appeared in the Bombay Gazette :—

"TO THE EDITOR,—Sir,—Your verbose, 'persistent, and opinionative' contemporary, the Times of India (his own words), has favoured its readers with another long diatribe on the question of gauge for Indian railways. The writer, whoever he is, has first a supercilious sneer at Mr. W. P. Andrew, the chairman of the Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Railways, for circulating Mr. Hawkesley's opinion along with the last half-yearly report of the Scinde Railway meeting.

"It is very fortunate for Indian railway enterprise that Mr. W. P. Andrew is a 'persistent and opinionative' man, as to that very qualification India owes the early introduction of railways, when nearly everybody else thought they would never answer in India.

"Commencing life as a young Indian officer in Bengal, he soon, like many others in India, found a more congenial sphere in the Postal Department, and after his early retirement from the service, being no longer dependent on his profession for a living, he took up the Indian Railway question, and his book, by an old Indian Postmaster, was, I believe, the first book that had a convincing effect on the authorities in Leadenhall-street and at the Board of Control. I have heard a gentleman tell the story that, upon one occasion, calling at the latter place in Cannon-row, Westminster, he found the old directors and the president, Sir J. Hobhouse, discussing the subject in a most animated manner with Mr. Andrew's book in their hands. How he was finally shuffled out in an underhand way from the Bengal line, and was offered the Scinde line, is a matter that was well known at the time. He was treated like poor John Chapman on the Great Indian Peninsula line, only Mr. Andrew had powerful friends, and had lots of 'persistence' left in him.

"Mr. Andrew was one of the first to recognise the importance of making cheaper railways in India, for it was he who started and matured a company in 1857 for that purpose in connection with the iron mines of Kumaon; but his persistence did not, in this instance, prevail, though he almost begged the Government at home to sanction that scheme in lieu of the Punjab and Delhi line. In this attempt he spent of his own money, to my certain knowledge, upwards of £2,000, and I dropped a trifle of about half as much on the same cause, for which we neither got thanks nor anathemas, only official snubs. I also know that Mr. Andrew has spent large sums of his own money for promoting the telegraph (via Turkey) to India, also in the Euphrates Valley line, so that he is always ready to back up his persistence and opinionativeness with his own ready cash. Mr. Andrew is quite able to take care of himself, but it is not here, so I have taken up my pen to defend him as an old and well-known acquaintance, but I am in no way connected with him or any of the undertakings he is engaged in at present.

"As regards the question of gauge plenty has already been said and written, and the Government will probably persist in its blundering policy until it finds out its mistake to its cost. The only recommendation which I can see for the narrow gauge is that it will give additional employment to railway engineers and contractors to take them up and relay them, so 'it's an ill wind that blow's nobody any good.' My theory is, instead of trying to make so many railways, make a few thousand miles of good common roads, and make the railways when they are wanted, and not till then. The new Governor-General will, as a large English capitalist, have had many opportunities of knowing all about the break of gauge question, and he will doubtless bring his experience to bear, it is hoped, before it is too late.

"As to who initiated the narrow gauge question or backed it up besides 'C.E.' in the Times (a well-known gentleman of Hibernian experience), there is no doubt that Colonel R. L. Strachey has had much to do with it; he is one of those peculiarly clever and crochety gentlemen who would write a minute on any subject, be it the vibration of a magnet, the amputation of a limb, the erection of a barracks, the excavation of a dock or a ditch, the building of a locomotive; indeed, writing minutes has ever been his particular forte, of which hundreds of examples might be given. But one will suffice for Bombay. Witness his memo. on the harbour of Bombay, and his recommendation to buy up the Elphinstone wilderness and its puddle docks.

Miscellaneous.

PAY DEPARTMENT.—Major Williams, paymaster, Sirhind Circle, retires from the service at once.

DEATH OF LIEUT. R. N. GORDON.—The Jabulpore paper mentions the death of Lieut. R. N. Gordon, of the 1-11th regiment, at Morar, of brain fever, caught whilst out in camp.

SHIAHS AND SUNIS.—For the first time for hundreds of years the two opposite Mahomedan sects of Sunis and Shiahs knelt together in harmonious prayer at Meerut, on the occasion of thanksgiving for the recovery of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

lutely untouched, and merely extends, in a distinctly legal form, to such persons as have abandoned their creeds, a right which (as Mr. Stephen on a late occasion conclusively showed) there is every reason to believe already exists. Less than this we surely could not do. To tell a man that he may abandon his religion "without forfeiture of property or rights," and then to deny him the power of contracting a valid marriage, is a species of trifling and meanness to which it is impossible that the British Government should condescend. But then it is said, "why not confine the Bill to the Brahmo Somaj, instead of making it applicable to all who have abandoned the native religions?" The answer is, first, that at the present moment there are other classes besides the Brahmo Somaj body who need the relief of the Bill; and secondly, that, even if there were not, nothing could be more certain to produce trouble, confusion, and litigation for the future, than to make so vague, indeterminate, and fluctuating a community as the Brahmo Somaj the subject of express legislation. As it is, the body has already split up, and one-half of its members are as anxious for the Bill as the other half are vehement against it. These halves are again, as is the certain tendency in such cases, separating into smaller sub-divisions. Some declare themselves Hindus; some passionately disavow Hinduism; some accept Keshub Chunder Sen as their leader; others altogether repudiate his authority. Some are for bringing women into public; some are for the maintenance of the purdah. Each and all claim to be the true Brahmo Somaj. Each month, we may say, will develop some new divergence of opinion; each month the task of deciding what is the Brahmo Somaj will become increasingly difficult; each month the sect will include views more widely remote, feelings more strongly unsympathetic. Surely, with such a process at work, it would be the height of impolicy to legislate expressly for a body which at the present moment it would be difficult to define, and which, in a few years, is likely to comprise a dozen hostile sects with nothing in common with one another, but the name to which all have equal pretensions. Thus, a general civil marriage having been abandoned as too revolutionary, and a Bill expressly for Brahmos as certain to produce confusion, we do not see what course was open to the Government but to introduce a measure of which all who are not members of any of the established religions might equally make use. The present is in fact a Civil Marriage Bill, confined in its effect to that area to which none of the great creeds of the country extends.

HILL TEA.—We see it stated that the Punjab hill tea is coming into favour in Bokhara and Kabul. Kabul merchants are said to have instructed their agents to buy up all the hill tea sent to Umritsur.—Pioneer.

THE NIZAM'S COAL-FIELDS.—The existence of coal on the Nizam's side of the Wurda valley is now no longer a matter of speculation, and the active measures which H.H.'s Government is taking to ascertain the real extent of these hidden mines of wealth show that it is fully alive to the importance of the discovery. Should the expectations which these discoveries have given rise to be realised, the future of these territories bids fair to be very prosperous. Besides being productive of incalculable benefit to the State, it will also be the means of affording excellent opportunities to enterprising capitalists, whom, doubtless, the Government would gladly encourage, and employment to many. Coal has been found in the districts of Indore, Commumett, and Yellgundal; and the extent of these discoveries warrants the belief that the coal-measures are spread over a considerable tract of country. Experimental measures on a large scale have as yet been carried on only at Rajore and Tasti in the last-named district. A mining party has lately been despatched to the Commumett district, and reports of his progress will be anxiously looked for. The results of the operations at Rajore and Tasti are of a highly encouraging and satisfactory nature. A seam of coal in one part fifty feet thick, and, as far as at present ascertained, extending over an area of five square miles, has been struck; and the best kind of coal obtained has been pronounced by an eminent geologist to be of a very good quality and equal to any that has as yet been found in this country. This opinion is borne out by the results of several experiments which have been made in connection with this coal. It burns with a clear, bright flame, imports no offensive odour, emits gaseous matter freely, and leaves an average residue of only thirteen per cent. of ash, which is considered a fair average for Indian coal. It is further stated that this coal is well adapted for the use of locomotives. Samples are to be sent to Dr. Oldham, superintendent of the Geological Survey of India, for analysis and report. It may be remarked that it is the opinion of geologists that these coal-measures lie chiefly on the right or south side of the Wurda river. If this be so, the Nizam's State is to be congratulated on the good fortune in store for it. These facts in a great measure support the railway scheme proposed a short time back by Mr. Hardy Johnston, the secretary to H.H. the Nizam's Government, P. W. D., and fully justifies the energy with which that gentleman is now pushing on the survey of the line of railway which is to connect these important coal fields with Hyderabad. The Government of India will, there is no doubt, immediately the importance of the project is placed beyond question, see the advisability of bringing the main lines of railways in British territories into connection with those which are about to be undertaken in this State.—Madras Times.

CHOLERA IN JAUNPORE.—We regret to hear that cholera is very prevalent in the Jaunpore district, to the north of Benares and Allahabad. Vigorous measures have, however, we are glad to observe, been taken by the authorities to check it.

LOODIANA.—We read that it has been determined that Loodiana is again to be made a military station. The 1st Goorkhas and a squadron of the 12th Bengal Cavalry will remain there till relieved. H.M. 54th at Jullundur will probably contribute to the force to be stationed there.

THE MOHURRUM.—Hindoos and Mahomedans throughout India have arranged that the Holey and Mohurram festivals this year shall not clash, and so lead to breaches of the public peace. The Hindoo festival is generally to be held three days earlier than usual, and the Mahomedan one three days later.

POLITICAL.—Major Bannerman, Bheel Agent, and who is in political charge of the Bhopawar Agency, and Commandant of the Malwa Bheel Corps, has been transferred as political agent to Rewah, in place of Captain Bradford, who has proceeded on leave to England. The nomination of Major Bannerman's successor rests with Major-General Daly, C.B.

BANK OF BENGAL.—The directors of the Bank of Bengal have made the following changes in the bank's establishment:—Mr. John Hector to be acting-inspector of branches, Mr. Thomas Dyson to resume charge of the Moulmein Branch, Mr. J. Seymour Keay to be agent at Patna, vice Mr. W. F. Fraser, appointed agent at Lahore. Mr. J. D. Watters, of Lahore, is no longer in the bank's service.

CIVIL ENGINEERS' SCHOLARSHIP.—The civil engineers of the Bengal Public Works Department have started an Endowment Fund for giving scholarships to the Cooper's-hill College. The idea was started by Mr. Leonard, chief engineer and secretary to the Government of Bengal, and it has been most liberally responded to by the service generally, sufficient subscriptions having been already promised to enable the fund to give exhibitions to the extent of £250 per annum.

GOLD IN KANDAHAR.—General Pollock has, we are informed, remitted to Calcutta specimens of gold-bearing quartz from the neighbourhood of Kandahar, which, in the opinion of the best mineralogists available, seem to argue the presence, in considerable quantity and in very rich proportion, of the precious metal. It would open up curious prospects to speculation if the Amir were to indent on Australia or California for scientific diggers.—Pioneer.

THE KOOKAS AND THE ASSASSINATION OF LORD MAYO.—A correspondent writing to the Indian Statesman from Umritsur says that the Kookas boast that the death of Lord Mayo was caused by their Gooroo, Ram Singh. The same writer adds, "They say the same of the murder of Justice Norman. The two murders were in revenge of the hanging of the Raicote murderers and the execution of the Kotlah rebels. They say also that the aurora was the blood of their brethren calling for vengeance from heaven."

COST OF THE CAMP AT DELHI.—It is said by a contemporary that the Camp of Exercise at Delhi, which it was originally estimated would cost but two lacs of rupees, has cost four lacs. This increase on the estimated expenditure is attributed to several regiments having been compelled to halt for a fortnight on the line of march to the camp in consequence of the outbreak of cholera. It is also estimated that the Camp of Exercise to be held every other year will not cost more than two hundred thousand rupees.

FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT, CALCUTTA.—Mr. W. Clark, Deputy Accountant, Bengal, having applied for leave of absence for one year to go to Europe, it has been ordered by the Financial Department, Government of India, that he must retire on pension, and it is rumoured that Mr. Biss, at present attached to the Comptroller-General's Office, will be appointed to officiate in the post. Mr. G. Fitzgerald, Acting Deputy Comptroller-General, will be appointed Deputy Accountant-General, Bengal, on Mr. Clark's retirement on pension.—Englishman, March 13.

A SCIENTIFIC PROGRAMME.—The Indian Observer republishes a Bengalee's programme of an evening's scientific entertainment, which is said to have been circulated "in an important station in Bengal." It is headed "phantasmagoria and splendid magics," and contains promises of "deserving views" and "astronomical representations." The whole is guaranteed as "a very enchanting, pleasing and deserving magics, both European and Indian, highly interesting to the students and to those that are not acquainted with the astronomical science."

PRIZES FOR SHOOTING.—The handsome prizes given annually by Lord Napier of Magdala for excellence in shooting in the Indian Army are producing splendid results. Last year there were 1,950 competitors for these prizes; this year there have been 3,100! The shooting also has improved wonderfully. In 1870-71 the improvement, taking the shooting of the whole army together, was as great as 25 points over the register of the previous twelvemonth, and this year there has been a further advance of 14 points—a total gain in two years of 39 points. The special prizes are a cup valued in England at £70, a watch at £20, and a sword at £10. The whole of the entrance-money, moreover, Rs. 3,100, is distributed in a number of money prizes, thereby giving a large number of competitors a chance of much more than recouping their entrance money.

THE MEDICAL SERVICE.—It seems very hard on the Medical officers of the Bengal Service that to meet the want of candidates from England their furlough should be stopped! Yet such we (Pioneer) understand to be the case, and so long as Mr. Grant Duff thinks it preferable to allow vacancies to accumulate over a series of years instead of holding regular yearly examinations, this state of thing must, we suppose, continue. The most pressing evil is the retention of officers in India who have served for more than the prescribed time, and who naturally look forward with confidence for permission to visit England, not only to recruit their strength, but to refreshen their knowledge of a profession which more than any other is constantly progressive.

MR. HOWELL'S ILLNESS.—We greatly regret to learn from the Pioneer that Mr. Arthur Howell, the Under-Secretary to the Government of India in the Home and Financial Departments, is suffering under so severe and sudden an access of indisposition that he has been ordered home at once from Calcutta, and forbidden by his medical advisers to incur the fatigue of the long railroad journey to Bombay. He will accordingly sail from Calcutta on the 14th inst. As our contemporary remarks—"In Mr. Howell the Government of India will lose temporarily one of its very ablest servants. The services he has already rendered in the single department of education would alone suffice to make a long career illustrious."

THE NEW FIELD PIECE.—The experimental practice of D-D brigade R.H.A., with the new nine-pounder rifled guns, against the embrasure of date logs, constructed at the Royal Artillery Butts at Delhi, was a partial failure. No fault is attributed to the piece, the projectile, or the cartridge, the laying of the guns at the different ranges from 500 to 1,700 yards was overlooked by Captain Sir William Hamilton himself, but an experienced officer on the spot considered that the men had not had sufficient acquaintance with the new weapon, its equipment, ammunition, and stores. Lord Napier ordered the guns to be returned into store the following day, and Captain Hamilton received back the old nine-pounder equipment.

A COURTEOUS ANSWER.—Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen has received the subjoined letter in reply to one despatched by him to Colonel Ponsonby expressing his gratification at the recovery of the Prince of Wales:—"OSBORNE, Feb. 8, 1872.—My dear Sir,—I lost no time in laying before the Queen the kind letter you have written to me, and can assure you that her Majesty was much gratified with the sympathising and loyal expressions you have made use of in conveying your congratulations on the happy recovery of the Prince of Wales. I am happy to say that his Royal Highness is rapidly recovering his strength, and intends to take part, if he is well enough, in the Thanksgiving Service on the 27th.—Believe me, &c., HENRY F. PONSONBY."

THE MAHARAJAH OF CASHMERE.—His Highness the Maharajah Rhanbeer Singh, G.C.S.I., Maharajah of Jummoo and Cashmere, has, in token of gratitude for the recovery of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, forwarded to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab the sum of £2,100, to be expended in the relief of the sick and distressed in the hospitals and charitable institutions of the Punjab. The Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor has allotted this munificent gift as follows:—Mayo Dispensary, Lahore, £700; Dispensary, Umritsur, £400; Delhi, £400; Peshawur, £200; Sealkote, £100; Gujranwala, £100; Mooltan, £100; Leper Asylum, Umritsur, £100. The Lieutenant-Governor has not prescribed any manner in which the money thus allotted may be utilised, as he feels confident that the European and native gentlemen who form the committees of the several institutions will use their best endeavours to give full effect to the generous intentions of his Highness the Maharajah.

GENERAL BEATSON, THE "INDIAN MURAT."—It is strange that the London compilers of Reuter's telegrams should not have thought the demise of an officer who has played so conspicuous a part both in Europe and in India worthy of report. Indeed this circumstance would almost warrant a faint hope that the announcement of his death may be erroneous. But the broken health in which he left us only a few months ago makes the sad report only too credible. With some weaknesses or eccentricities, General Beatson had many qualities to command regard. He had seen much and most varied service in Spain, in Scinde and the Deccan, and in Turkey and the Crimea. In that last field of active service General Beatson was in a false position—the duties expected from him were incompatible with the conditions within which he was to perform them. He was put at the head of a horde of savages, and people were shocked because his lawless brigands were not as meek as missionaries. They gave him nothing to do, and sneered because he did nothing. It was one of the greatest blunders of that war of blunders, that the English commanders-in-chief possessed and wasted an instrument so incomparable in its way as Brigadier Beatson at that time was. He was never the same since. The mortification of a great chance missed distorted some of his best qualities into defects. His energy became restlessness, and his justifiable self-confidence, when it had no field for exercise, was apt to be betrayed into self-assertion. The truth is that, though devoted to the last to his profession, he was latterly a mere wreck—a touching spectacle to those who remembered the brilliant leader of Beatson's Horse, such as he was when, in Bundelkund and the Deccan, he won deservedly the title of the "Indian Murat."—Pioneer, March 6.

THE COMMITTEE ON RAILWAY TRAFFIC.—The report of the Committee appointed to examine into the causes of the loss of traffic on the East Indian Railway mention the following drawbacks to sending goods by rail, as compared with transport by river:—(1), the complicated nature of the tariff and the frequent changes made in it, so puzzling to native dealers; (2), non-publication of the tariff in the vernacular, leaving the trader at the mercy of railway underlings; (3), the general incivility of railway officials of all grades; (4), insufficient shed accommodation at the stations; (5), the want of other facilities at the stations for receiving and despatching goods; the necessity of bribing understrappers, and worry of all kinds; (6), the loss from pilfering and ill-usage; (7), difficulty in getting compensation for losses; (8), the practice of not granting receipts for cost of carriage of bearing goods, or for excess sums charged on delivery; (9), want of punctuality in despatch; (10), the system of demurrages at Howrah.—Pioneer.

COLLISION IN THE HOOGHLY.—Loss of the "OCEAN CHIEF."—On Sunday last, according to one contemporary, and on Monday evening, according to another, a serious collision took place in the Hooghly between the steamer Thomas Wilson and the ship Ocean Chief. The Englishman says:—"The steamer Thomas Wilson, outward bound, ran into the Ocean Chief at Royapur Reach, striking her on the star-board bow. The Ocean Chief's boats were ordered out at once, and the crew, with the exception of one man, were all saved. It is said that the unfortunate ship went down five minutes after she was struck. The cause of the accident has not been ascertained." The Indian Daily News says:—"The former vessel (Ocean Chief) appears to have sustained serious damage since she foundered in Royapur Reach at five o'clock on the same day. The steamer proceeded on to sea. No telegrams other than those that appear in the Gazette have been received relative to the Ocean Chief, so that we presume no lives were lost. This is the first casualty that has happened in the Hooghly this year."—Times of India, March 18.

LADY MAYO AND THE EX-KING OF OUDE.—We find from the Urdu Guide that the following letter of condolence has been sent by the ex-King of Oude to Lady Mayo:—"Dear Lady, I have learnt with deep horror and pain the announcement of the frightful death, under the vile hand of a wanton convict at Port Blair, of my esteemed friend his Excellency the Earl of Mayo, late Viceroy and Governor-General of India. The grief universally felt at his untimely death is a faithful index of the esteem and respect in which all classes held his Lordship for his eminent qualities and virtues, and for his devotion for the welfare of the people over whom he governed with the abilities of a consummate statesman. If his Excellency's death under so painful a circumstance has cast gloom and grief over all who have heard it, I shrink to think how poignant must be the grief you cannot help suffering from, and I sincerely pray to the Almighty Dispenser of all things to give you strength to bear the irreparable loss and bereavement you are mourning for, far above all others, and that your Excellency may reach home in good health, and when surrounded by your children and family, your Ladyship may obtain resignation and even happiness for many years to come. With sincere sympathy and esteem, your Excellency's valued husband's sincere friend, Wajid Ali."

RETURN OF GENERAL BOURCHIER'S COLUMN.—The following, we understand, are the orders issued for the departure of the troops and coolies attached to General Bouchier's, or the Left Column of the Loshai Expedition from Chattak:—"The Left Wing 22nd P.N.I. will leave Chattak on the 18th March, embarking on the Jabuna and Ganges, and proceeding to Dacca, where the depot and luggage of the regiment will be picked up and taken on to Goalando. After the disembarkation at Goalando the Jabuna and Ganges will return to Chattak for coolies. The Head-quarters 22nd P.N.I., half Battery Royal Artillery, and one company Sappers will embark at Chattak on board the flat Ghazepore about the 26th of March. Four hundred and ninety-five coolies will embark on the same date on board the flat Gogra. The two flats will be towed by the steamer Prince Albert to Golando, arriving there about the 1st or 2nd April. The steamer Prince Albert and the two flats will then return to Chattak for coolies. The 42nd Assam L.I. and the 14th N.I. will march to Gowhatti and Shillong respectively from Sivas. The Kolodyne and Sola will be at Gowhatti to take the 42nd in vans to Dibrugarh, and bring back thence the troops detached from the 43rd N.I., from Gowhatti and Tezpur respectively. The Commissariat Department will victual the transports, and twelve feet is to be the space allowed to each man. As yet little or nothing is known as to the return of troops from General Brownlow's (or the Right) Column, but it is to be hoped that they will not be kept in the Loshai country much longer, as the climate must be telling on everyone by this time.

THE TRACTION ENGINE COMPANY.—The Traction Engine Company in Madras, after a long struggle, has collapsed, and the engine and plant are advertised to be sold by the Sheriff.

THE VELLAU BRIDGE.—The local Government have applied to H.E. the Commander-in-Chief for the services of a European non-commissioned officer and twelve native sappers from Bangalore to proceed immediately to the site of the bridge recently destroyed across the Vellaur in the South Arcot district, with a view to blast away the blocks of fallen masonry in order to admit the foundations, being examined by the committee appointed for the purpose.—Daily Examiner.

THE HIGH COURT.—The Supreme Government have called upon the Judges of the Madras High Court to ascertain whether any reduction can conveniently be made in the number of the present Judges, there being every probability that one of the Judges will retire from the service by the end of March next.

THE SUPERINTENDING SURGEON OF THE MADRAS LYING-IN-HOSPITAL.—It is just probable that Dr. Harris, the Superintending-Surgeon of the Lying-in-Hospital, will proceed on furlough to England almost immediately. Dr. Harris has earned for himself a lasting reputation in our Presidency. He has held a most important charge, and the good he has done as a professional man is acknowledged among all classes of the public. It is not as yet known who will be Dr. Harris' locum tenens, but there is no doubt that our Inspector-General will make a suitable selection of a successor to Dr. Harris's appointment.—Madras Athenæum.

A DISTRESSING CASE.—We often come across distressing cases, but we seldom have met with a worse one than the following:—We are told that an officer, who, after spending twenty years in India, has been obliged to retire from the army on a very limited income, has appealed to the public for help. He has been for the past three or four years seeking employment in vain, each year adding to the great difficulty of supporting his family. Within the last six months, owing to the long and tedious illness of his wife, he has been forced to forestall his small pension, and now finding himself unable any longer to get advances, he is literally without funds to provide food for his family. The officer who thus advertises is a Major who was formerly in the D.P.W. His father is a Knight.—Madras Times.

BANGALORE.—The weather, we regret to say, is getting quite hot enough to make one wish with that most inveterate of jokers, the late Sydney Smith, that it were not impossible to take off one's skin and transact the ordinary business of life in one's bones. The thermometer, as a matter of course, ranges uncomfortably high, and as for blankets at nights they are not to be thought of. The great lack of water too is another nuisance, greater even than the dust, and we sincerely hope the rumour is true that the native community are preparing an address to the Chief Commissioner imploring him to abolish the Mysore Local Force, and spend part at least of the money thus saved on the water supply of Bangalore. It is disgraceful that year after year the scheme should be shelved, and we shall be very glad indeed if the natives tell Colonel Mead respectfully, but plainly, what they think about it.—Bangalore Herald, March 12.

THE CHEYAIR BRIDGE ACCIDENT will altogether be a costly one to the company. Some time ago a suit for compensation was filed in the High Court at Madras, by the representatives of the late Streenevassa Charry, the vakil who lost his life in that accident. Curiously enough, the suit was filed on the very day on which the statutable period of one year expired. It appears that within one year of the accident any of the relations of the unfortunate people who lost their lives by the accident could have brought a suit against the railway company for damages, but not after that period had expired. The suit of Streenevassa Charry's representatives, after some adjournments, was to have come on for settlement of issues on Monday next, the 11th inst., but has now been withdrawn on the railway consenting to pay as compensation the sum of Rs. 12,000.—Madras Mail.

A REMARKABLE METEOR was observed at Guntoor on the 7th instant at 10 p.m. It fell (apparently) about a mile N.W. by N. of the town. Starting from the zenith in the form of an ordinary falling star of no remarkable brightness, when it arrived within about 60 deg. of the horizon it suddenly burst out into the most brilliant flame, which continued until it reached about 15 deg. of the horizon, when it burst into several fragments, which at once became of a dull red colour, and so disappeared. The light thrown out by this meteor at its brilliant stage was of the most intense white, similar in quality to that of burning magnesium wire, and the whole scene was lighted up as brightly as if the full moon were shining, for a period of about four seconds. Owing to the noise in the bazaar (Shiva Ratri feast) our correspondent failed to notice whether any noise accompanied the phenomenon. We would be glad to hear whether this meteor was noticed elsewhere.—Madras Mail.

A NATIVE PLEADER GOING TO ENGLAND.—We learn that Mr. Attamaram Jugonath, a pleader of the High Court, proceeds to England as a vakil on behalf of a Kattywar chief.

FROM BUSSORAH TO BAGHDAD.

BAGHDAD, Feb. 3.—I write from the grand old city of the Khalifs where I arrived from Bussorah only three days since. The weather almost immediately after I wrote last from the latter place, became so stormy as to prevent the vessels loading or unloading their cargoes. Friday, the 26th ult., indeed, resembled at Bussorah your stormiest S.W. monsoon days in Bombay, except that the thermometer stood at 40 deg. F. or lower, instead of 90 deg. The wind, which was at first N. or N.W., veered to the N.E. and then round to the S.E., blowing up the Shatel Arab with such violence that the river resembled your harbour in a S.W. gale. The rain meanwhile poured down heavily, and the cold, barely above freezing point, was something to be remembered. Large flocks of wild ducks, and geese too, which seemed as if disturbed by the cold farther north, came downward swimming nearly to the vessels in the river and then taking wing went off again. On Saturday, the 27th, the storm had ceased, after giving to the farmers of that region, if even there had been no more previously, as much rain as they had received for each of the three years last past. The day being fine and calm, ships transferred cargo, and with a few other "Feringees," and two or three hundred Turks, Persians, and Arabs, who were going north, I went on board the paddle steamer Dijleh, commanded by Captain A. Holland, a well known navigator of these parts for forty years past, saving only a month. Formerly a servant of the H.E.I. Company's navy, he has become an honoured historical personage here in more senses than one. Mrs. Ida Pfeiffer, the well-known German traveller, relates that a quarter of a century ago she shared the hospitalities of the present Captain's home (who was then an officer in Baghdad) in preference to those of the English Resident, who was at that time a bachelor. There was a sort of sly hit in that remark, probably from the widow to bachelors in general. The authoress, too, was careful to add that her hospitable entertainer possessed the affections of a young and pretty wife, born in Baghdad, who had brought her husband some half dozen little domestic ornaments, the eldest of whom was already eight years of age, though the mother had scarcely seen twenty-three summers. The domestic delights or "olive branches," as some have called them, ran up to fourteen (most of whom are alive, I believe, though some are "gone before"), and then a second crop began to sprout up in the shape of grandchildren. Where this will end no one knows; but if, as a high authority has it, "the man is happy that hath his quiver full" of such "arrows," then is the hale and hearty Commander of the Dijleh a happy man, as indeed he seems to be. Nor among the pursuits of commerce or the affairs of a household were the "pleasures" overlooked; for among the books on board which were shared by the captain and the purser, Mr. Yacoub Soobada, and freely placed at the perusal of passengers, were several standard works relating to this interesting region of the old world, as Kitto's Biblical Encyclopædia, Heeren's "Historical Researches in Asia," Murray's "Handbook of Syria," Whiston's "Josephus," "History of the Jewish Wars," some two or more volumes on the Antiquities of Nineveh and Babylon, Johnston's Gazetteer of the World, besides poetry and light reading for those who would be gay; while the whole was supplemented by a collection of M.S. notes and anecdotes of the way from travellers of his own experience, so that the voyage up the Tigris or the Dijleh, as the Turks call the river, though it lasted four days, and was sometimes so cold as to freeze the water on deck, was far from tedious or unpleasant. The comfortable cabins, the generous fare, and (would you who parboil yourselves in Bombay believe it?) the cheerful fire in the saloon, no doubt were intended by the captain to contribute to this. And should any of your readers, who are sweltering in Bombay, desire a bracing climate with new and changing scenery, they may certainly have it by making a winter trip to the Gulf by the B. I. Company's steamers, which will take them first class as far as Bussorah, visiting Kurrachee, Muscat, Ormus, and Bushire on the way for Rs. 290, and then they may proceed to Baghdad by one of the two commodious English steamers for about Rs. 45 or Rs. 60 more. And if any such voyager long before he arrives at the latter place does not acquire an appetite keener than any razor, he may be set down as past all hope of reinvigoration.

But to return to our voyage. We weighed anchor shortly after three P.M. of Saturday, the 27th; the weather was fair and the afternoon and evening were of the loveliest, and as the steamer passed up the river amid the groves of date palms, some of the passengers amused themselves by shooting at the immense flocks of wild ducks and geese, or at the less gregarious pelicans to be found on the river. About eight P.M. we passed the spit of land which projects from the north at the junction of the Euphrates and Tigris, about 120 miles from the sea. The two rivers here are nearly equal in volume, the Tigris being slightly the narrowest. Here the Turkish telegraph is carried across from Baghdad and Mesopotamia towards Bussorah; here, too, tradition points to the site of the Garden of Eden. And even now it is one of the prettiest spots on the river for several hundred miles.

The river banks, which had been almost bare for some miles below, are here lined with date trees, and a village partly hid amid these has some substantial brick-built houses for Government officials, and a telegraph office, all on the left bank of the Tigris, which we now entered. As a passenger was to be landed here, and it being bright moonlight, with a nearly full moon, four of the European passengers also landed in the boat for the purpose of making a raid on an acacia tree, which has the misfortune to grow here, and which is said, without much foundation, to have furnished the primitive wardrobe of the original gardeners. The most that can be said is that the tree stands there in proof of the fact; while the more advanced descendants of the original pair now sometimes make themselves aprons and mats for clothing and shelter of the leaves of the date palm.

Shortly before breakfast on the following morning a blue mosque-like dome of shining enamelled bricks or tiles appeared in sight on the right bank of the river, and which tradition points to as Ezra's tomb, who died while on a diplomatic visit to Persia and was buried here, though some of the Jews affirm that he returned to Jerusalem after his Persian journey, and died and was gathered to his fathers. The dome rises from the interior of a quadrangle of mud walls, about twenty feet high, and thirty or forty yards square. One side abuts on the river, and has a small door with steps to the water's edge; the main entrance, a handsomely enamelled doorway, however, being on the north side. The walls are battlemented, and the small windows are all beyond the reach of robber climbers, while two or three lofty palms rising near the dome give to the picture an interesting oriental appearance. The place, which has perhaps twenty or thirty families, is said to be greatly venerated both by Mahomedans and Jews. Scarcely had we passed this spot when on the opposite bank appeared what seemed at first to be a pair of bison, or some kind of black oxen, but which turned out to be an enormous wild boar or tusker and his consort. The sight of the steamer approaching near the shore by no means alarmed the courageous monster, who reared himself up, his tall shoulders being little if any below the height of a buffalo, while he sharpened his tusks as if about to charge the ship. Guns were instantly brought out, they were however already loaded only with fowling shot. Piggy received the contents of one of these barrels in his face, and another in his side, with no other apparent effect than to make him shake himself and gallop off with a roar. Not so his consort—she received a charge of small shot with a quiet shake of the head, and a second broadside only made her go off at a slow trot, which she quickened into a gallop, when a ball struck the ground near her feet. The captain, who was no stranger to this kind of animal, pronounced the boar the largest by far that he remembered to have seen in this country. The two were certainly an awkward looking couple for a stranger to meet in his lonely wanderings.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

OUTRAGES DURING THE TAKING OF THE CENSUS AT KAIRA.—A correspondent of the Chundrodya states that the people of Mahter, in the Kaira district, thinking that the Sirkar wanted to tax them in taking the census, went up in a body to the enumerators and threw dust in their eyes. The peon who accompanied the enumerators was assaulted with sticks, his head was broken, and he is said to be dangerously ill. One of the enumerators, frightened at this occurrence, left off taking the census.

A MILITARY ORPHANAGE.—The "Lawrence Military Asylum" Commission left Poona on Monday to visit Panchgunny and Mahabeshwar, with the view of selecting a healthy site for a Military orphanage. The Commission consists of A. J. Lawrence, Esq., C.S., Collector of Benares; Dr. Cunningham, Sanitary Commissioner, Bengal; and Captain Prendergast Walsh, Bombay Staff Corps. We understand that the Commission will shortly visit Bombay in order to acquire information as to the working of the various orphanages established at the Presidency.—Times of India, March 11.

POONA.—The present hot weather has caused a great increase in the cases of small-pox in the city of Poona; there are several cases at the Sassoon Hospital, we hear. An eruptive fever, which seems to answer the description given in another column of the dengue fever brought by the troopships from England, has made its appearance in the Cantonment and in the Convent. As all authorities declare it to be infectious, great care should be taken to prevent the contagion being carried about by those in attendance on the sick. Such weather as we have just now is sure to aggravate the symptoms of any eruptive disease, and increase the danger to the patient.—Deccan Herald, Mar. 13.

THE SIND FRONTIER.—Arrangements have been made by Allah Mahomed with the people of Kedj to afford Major St. John and party every assistance while they are on the Mekran border. It is hoped that they will find no difficulties in their journey. His Highness the Khan's Wazeer, the Shagasee Wullee Mahomed, has arrived at Jacobabad with Major Harrison, Political Agent, Khelat. The former has come to be present at the meeting which will be held next week in connection with the disturbances that have lately been going on in Beloochistan. The Sirdars concerned are expected to arrive at Jacobabad on the 4th March.—W. L. MEREWETHER, Colonel, Commissioner in Sind.

ADMIRAL MENDES.—We learn that before leaving India Admiral Mendes addressed the Secretary to Government in the Marine Department (General Marriott), asking that his acknowledgments might be conveyed to Captain Robinson, Superintendent of Marine, and to the officers serving under him, for the cordial co-operation they had at all times afforded him in the conduct of the enquiry upon which he was employed. His Excellency the Governor in Council has expressed himself much gratified to learn that Captain Robinson and the officers of the Marine Department have so well fulfilled his Excellency's wish in affording Admiral Mendes every possible assistance in the enquiries entrusted to him.

COTTON REPORT.—Mr. H. Rivett-Carnac, Commissioner of Cotton and Commerce to the Government of India, in a statement showing approximately the exports of cotton from the stations of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company in the Central Provinces and the Berars, from the beginning of the present season up to Feb. 10, reports that the quantity of cotton sent down to Bombay amounted to 68,144 full-pressed bales, 15,443 half-pressed bales, and 16,619 dokras, making a total of about 89,126 Bombay bales of half a kandy each. The exports of the present season up to date do not fall far short of double the quantity exported during the same period of the past season 1870-71, and are considerably more than double that of the corresponding period of 1869-70.

COTTON GINS.—The public announcement now made by the Cotton Commissioner that the trial of cotton gins adjourned from Manchester to India will shortly take place, must have attracted attention amongst "cottonists." We understand that the Dobson and Barlow's machines, one large for cattle power, the other small for manual labour, have duly arrived; and Jones's were already here. These will be set to work at Dharwar in competition with the saw gin. All three machines will here, under the superintendence of Mr. W. Bowden, as representative of Dr. Forbes Watson, be employed on both the indigenous and exotic cotton—the Compta and Darwar Orleans. But we find it is virtually impracticable to set the Macarthy's to work in those districts where steam-power is not available except at great and special expense; therefore it has been decided, we believe, to take the new Dharwar-Orleans kuppas to Broach, where the Macarthy's are all at work. There the test can take place under the careful superintendence of Mr. Bowden, so as to settle the question whether Macarthy's gin can dress the tenacious exotic cotton of Dharwar. Jones's and one or two other gins will also be tried at Broach.

TROUBLES IN THE PERSIAN GULF.—We have been informed that the Persians have taken Charbar from Syud Toorkee, and that the Persian General, Ibrahim Khan, has left Hossein Khan as Governor, and has gone to meet the Persian Commissioners to report that he has taken Charbar, which by right belonged to the Persians. We further learn that the Persian soldiers are treating British traders badly—they have plundered the godowns, and threaten to carry some of the residents to Persia. They say they defy the British Government to interfere. The traders are nearly starving, their dependence for food being on the telegraph employes. Syud Toorkee has sent boats to bombard the place and wrest it from the Persians. Hossein Khan told the British agent at Charbar that if he does not stop the fire from the boats, and order Syud Toorkee not to disturb the maritime peace, he will inform Ibrahim Khan of it, and get a large force to stand out. The telegraph employes are in danger of their lives. A Portuguese servant of theirs was fired on by Hossein Khan's men. Mr. Walton, of the telegraph department, and the British traders, have asked for protection; the latter more than once implored, but received answer that the Government could not interfere.—Times of India.

PANIC CAUSED BY THE CENSUS.—The chief characteristic of the conception formed of the "Sirkar" by the natives in some rural districts appears to be—an extensive organisation, of infinite power, to be known only to be dreaded. How else can we find an explanation of the terror displayed by poor rustics—who would probably be very small game even were it possible that the collector should be endowed with squeezing powers,—at the request to fill in census forms? We see that a correspondent of an Ahmedabad paper mentions that in Gangad, Bagdoo, and other villages in Guzerat the people actually hid the valuable portions of their property underground, either in the fields or under the floors of their houses, and that some even went so far as to conceal their children in the branches of trees, telling the enumerators that their buchas had died some time previously! The subjects of the Gaekwar were also afraid that the object of the Maharajah in wishing to obtain a census was that he might impose some new tax upon them, and they did all they could to avoid filling in the forms. We are told that in many cases in the Gaekwar's territory the enumerators, finding it impossible to get the forms properly filled in, entered imaginary names.—Bombay Gazette.

THE ROYAL NAVY AND INDIAN ALLOWANCES.—Now-a-days when the spirit of investigation is abroad, and men are not content to accept anything as a fait accompli of which the why and the wherefore are not patent and capable of comprehension, it will not surprise you that the sailors of the Royal Navy vessels employed by the Indian Government ask why they are differently treated from their brethren in the army, and that as they fail to perceive any adequate or just reason why the latter should get Indian allowances and they should not, they are not unreasonably discontented to a considerable extent. And is not there ample cause for such discontent? What is there in their relative duties to justify such a proceeding? It cannot be that the sailors are less important to the State, their duties less arduous, or less uncomfortable. The fatality on board the few ships employed in Indian waters during the past ten months shows that life is jeopardised to an inordinate extent by service in ships out here. Witness the recent loss on board the Daphne—the Admiral, a Sub-Lieutenant, and Captain; in the Magpie a Doctor, a Lieutenant, and two A. B.'s; in the Lynx an A. B., before the ship had arrived properly on her station—succumbed to the climatic diseases. Thus with cholera everywhere, sunstroke in the Gulf during the hot season, agues, bilious and breakbone fevers in the cold season, double pay would be an inducement which very few would be tempted by, were the service optional to proceed to the Gulf. Then, again, for those employed here, slave cruising is beyond their reach, and they have the not very consoling consciousness of being deprived of the chances of making prize money for being detained by the political residents in the Gulf when they feel themselves black-listed. There are many and minor grievances also to complain of. Provisions are high and bad. Necessaries of life barely within the reach of one's pay. Leave rarely obtainable. Society, except at Calcutta or Trincomalee, nil. Civility rarely procurable, except from the natives. But the crowning injustice is the different footing on which the Navy is placed from the Army, with superior risks, and innumerable greater discomforts. Indian allowances are withheld from them and given to soldiers for no better reason apparently than that one wears a red coat and the other a blue one, which is hardly a convincing one; treated like pariahs, as if unworthy of considerations of courtesy or kindness, is it wonderful that discontent exists—is the treatment politic or equitable, or one that the Empire approves of? To the Press, that mighty power, the expositor of grievances, the champion of the oppressed, the enemy of zoolum, and the redresser of wrongs, all eyes turn for sympathy and for succour. Are not the Blue-jackets deserving of both?—Times of India Correspondent.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, March 18.—The Grey Goods market has been very dull during the week, and with the exception, perhaps, of Printers, which are scarce, and command comparatively full rates, prices of nearly all descriptions are decidedly in favour of buyers. In Yarns there has been but a moderate business passing, and some of the lower accounts of Mule have a downward tendency. Metals, as a rule, show very little change.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, March 18.—Cotton: Although within the last two days a stronger feeling has been observable, our quotations for the mail show a decline on the week of Rs. 3 to Rs. 6 per candy. The business done has been small, only about 8,000 bales being reported as purchased for export on European account. In other articles of export there is no change worthy of note.

MONEY MARKET.—BOMBAY, March 18.—EXCHANGE: The business transacted for this mail has been very moderate, and rates close with, if anything, a downward tendency. The rates on China for 60 days' sight drafts are quoted at Rs. 219 per 100 dollars.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE EUROPEAN ARMY.

(Extract from the proceedings of the Government of India, Military Department—No. 463, dated Simla, Oct. 14, 1871.)

Read again—

Minute of Council, No. 749, dated January 17, 1865, and its accompaniments, regarding the distribution of the British forces in India.

Read the following papers connected with this subject :—

Letter from the Secretary to Government, Military Department, No. 242, dated May 23, 1865, &c., &c.

Resolution.—Since the distribution of the European army in Bengal was discussed and determined upon, as laid down in the Resolution of January 17, 1865, many reasons have combined to render a reconsideration of this subject desirable, indeed necessary.

2. The extension of the railway system, the development of the construction of new and improved barracks at certain stations, the reduction in the number of corps of cavalry and infantry, and batteries of artillery, and the desire alike of H.M.'s Government and of the Government of India that, consistently with the important political and military interests of the country, the European soldiery should be placed so as to be least exposed to unhealthy influences, are amongst the reasons which have led to a re-consideration of this very important question.

3. After a careful review of the present distribution, the circumstances of each cantonment, as regards accommodation, climate, and the obligation to retain garrisons of a particular strength at certain stations on political and strategical grounds, and the practicability of increasing the force to be permanently located in the hills, the Government of India have arrived at the following conclusions in regard to the distribution of the British cavalry and infantry in the Bengal Presidency, that of the royal artillery being separately determined.

Peshawur District.

4. The question of the garrison of Peshawur itself is under separate and special consideration in connection with a recent despatch from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, but, for the present, and pending further orders, the European force in this district, as regards cavalry and infantry, will be as follows :—

Nowshera, 1 infantry regiment.

5. Rawul Pindee Division.

Rawul Pindee, 1 cavalry regiment—to be brought eventually from Ahmednuggur, in Bombay, and to take the place of one of the two British infantry regiments now at Rawul Pindee, which will be removed to the Murree Hills.

Murree Hills, 1 infantry regiment.

Sealkote, 1 cavalry regiment.

6. Lahore Division.

Lahore, 1 infantry regiment.

Ferozepore, 1 infantry regiment.

Mooltan, 1 infantry regiment—one company at Fort Akalgarh, Dera Ismail Khan.

Govindghur, detail.

7. Sirhind Division.

Umballa, 1 cavalry regiment, and 1 infantry regiment.

Jullundur, 1 infantry regiment.

Subathoo, 1 infantry regiment.

Dugsbai, 1 infantry regiment.

Chuckrata, 1 infantry regiment.

8. Meerut Division.

Meerut, 1 cavalry regiment, and 1 infantry regiment.

Futtehghur, detail—this arrangement will cease on the removal of the gun carriage agency.

Agra, 1 infantry regiment.

Muttra, 1 cavalry regiment.

Delhi, 4 infantry companies.

Roorkee, 4 infantry companies—eventually Roorkee will be given up, and one of the regiments now placed at Meerut, Delhi, and Roorkee, placed at Chuckrata or elsewhere, and the other regiment divided—one wing at Meerut and the other at Delhi.

9. Rohilcund District.

Bareilly, 1 infantry regiment.

Moradabad, 4 infantry companies.

Raneekhet, 1 infantry regiment and four companies.

10. Gwalior District.

Morar, 2 infantry regiments—the question of the garrison of Morar is under reference to the Secretary of State.

11. Oudh Division.

Lucknow, 1 cavalry regiment and 2 infantry regiments.

Seetapore, 4 infantry companies.

Fyzabad, 1 infantry regiment.

12. Allahabad Division.

Allahabad, 1 infantry regiment.

Cawnpore, 1 infantry regiment.

Dinapore, 1 infantry regiment.

Benares, 4 infantry companies.

Chunar, detail from Dinapore.

13. Saugor District.

Jubbulpore, 4 infantry companies. If Pachmarhi is successfully developed, it will relieve Jubbulpore and Saugor of detachments during the hot season.

Saugor, 1 infantry regiment.

Nowgong, 4 infantry companies.

14. Presidency District.

Fort William, 1 infantry regiment,—"Hazareebagh" in this district is at present occupied by a regiment of British infantry; but this will be eventually withdrawn, it having been included in the number for which provision will eventually be made.

Dum-Dum, 1 infantry regiment.

Barrackpore, detail, from the regiment at Dum-Dum.

15. Abstract.

Peshawur district, 3 infantry regiments.

Rawul Pindee division, 2 cavalry regiments and 2 infantry regiments.

Lahore division, 3 infantry regiments.

Sirhind division, 1 cavalry regiment and 5 infantry regiments.

Meerut division, 2 cavalry regiments and 3 infantry regiments.

Rohilcund district, 3 infantry regiments.

Gwalior district, 2 infantry regiments.

Oudh division, 1 cavalry regiment, 3 infantry regts., and 4 companies.

Allahabad division, 3 infantry regiments and 4 companies.

Saugor district, 2 infantry regiments.

Presidency district, 2 infantry regiments.

16. No changes are desired by the Government of Fort St. George, or proposed in the distribution of the European force in that Presidency. The question of the removal of the regiment at Deesa to Mount Aboo is also held in abeyance for the present. No change is desired by the Supreme Government in the allotment of British troops belonging to those Presidencies serving in territories under the administration of the Government of India; but, if Pachmarhi succeeds, a portion of the regiment at Kamptee may be removed to that hill station. The Bombay Government has already been authorised to try an experimental station in the Manderdeo Hills, and the withdrawal of a cavalry regiment from that Presidency is in accordance with the views of that Government in 1865, and will replace one of two regiments of this arm withdrawn from Bengal.

17. The convalescent depots will remain as at present, except that the Landour depot, now accommodated in hired houses, will be removed to Chuckrata as soon as the necessary buildings can be constructed there. The above arrangements will be carried out as accommodation exists or becomes available.

INDIAN OFFICERS' GRIEVANCES.

The following appeared in the Echo for April 2:—

"SIR,—When the army of the East India Company was transferred to the Crown, the bonus or purchase system which prevailed in the different regiments, with the full sanction and encouragement of the necessary authorities, was destroyed, and compensation was refused, in consequence of the erroneous statement of the then Secretary of State for India (Sir C. Wood) that the system was illegal. I will not dwell on the compensation scheme of Lord Cranborne, which, being based on imperfect information, signally failed to compensate the officers, and on that account has been condemned by the Madras and Bombay Governments.

"Whilst the aggrieved officers were wearily waiting, and waiting in vain, for some action by the India Office, consequent on this opinion, the majority of the House of Commons being in their favour, the Army Regulation Bill was passed through Parliament, and the over-regulation price of commissions in the Queen's Army, which had been paid in direct violation of a very stringent law, was conceded by a large majority; and (a point which affects us more nearly) the fourth clause of the Bill, which, as at first framed, offered to the officers of the late company's European regiments (now the new line regiments) compensation, according to the terms of Lord Cranborne's despatch (thus proving the identity of our cases) was altered on the amendment of Sir Charles Wingfield, so that as it now stands, it gives to our very own late brother officers "the sums they would have received from their juniors on retirement," several officers having retired from these regiments since the passing of the Act, receiving from the Commissioners their full bonus, forming a complete recognition by Government of the Indian Purchase or bonus system. Yet, when on the 13th of February, Colonel Sykes asked Mr. Grant Duff if the officers of the late Indian Army were now to be treated on the principle embodied in Clause 4 of the Army Regulation Bill, he curtly replied that the India Office intended to adhere to Lord Cranborne's scheme; and again, on the 19th inst., in reply to Sir J. Elphinstone's inquiry why, with reference to Clause 4 of the Regulation of the Forces Act of 1871, compensation was still withheld from the officers of the late Indian Army, Mr. Grant Duff replied, "that the claims of the officers to bonus compensation were disposed of by Lord Cranborne's despatch, and that her Majesty's Government had followed in every respect the same course as their predecessors, and they saw no reason why a settlement made by them so long ago should now be disturbed, because, under different circumstances a different arrangement was made last year with officers of a different army."

"Surely this is strange reasoning. The action and agitation kept up by the aggrieved officers is a direct refutation of the alleged 'settlement,' and our having been treated unjustly for eleven years is a curious pretext for treating us unjustly still.

"The truth is that the India Office will not acknowledge that any precedent, however strong, can affect us. We are therefore compelled to appeal to Parliament for the third time, trusting that the members of Parliament who prevented a heavy pecuniary loss being inflicted on the officers of the Royal Army, will endeavour to obtain for us similar justice.—I am, Sir, yours obediently, J. C. PHILLIPS, Lieut.-Col., President of the Bonus Committee."

HILL SANITARIA FOR THE TROOPS IN INDIA.

A paper by Mr. William Curran, assistant-surgeon, army staff, Dublin, on the advisability of providing European soldiers in India with sanatoria on the hills, by removing them thither from the plains, regiment by regiment, periodically, has been reprinted from the Dublin Quarterly Journal on Medical Sciences, November, 1871. We have found the information submitted by Mr. Curran of a thoroughly practical character, the result of the personal investigations and experiences of one who has traversed India in search of healthy locations for the troops in connection with his duties as an army surgeon. So useful, we beg to say, will be found the evidence in favour of hill residences for British troops contained in the brochure before us, that we consider it not improbable that it will attract the attention of the Imperial as well as local Government of our large Eastern possessions. It should not be lost sight of that we hold these possessions by military means and appliances, and that, therefore, it is of the first importance that we should conserve the health of the European Army we keep up there.

Mr. Curran points out the way to utilise sanitarial sites with economy and good effect at the same time. His evidence towards this object we think must be considered more direct, more simplified, and more practical than the elaborate and intricate inquiries and reports on Indian sanatoria offered by some Blue-books on the subject that we have gone through carefully, yet with but hazy ideas of what the official reporters would really have done, and how done. It has been, we believe, because there was always a certain impracticability or excess of costliness involved in the adoption of the recommendations of past reports on the Indian military sanitarium question presented in so elaborate a form, that they have not been carried out. Now, the opposite of such a defect is the favourable feature in Mr. Curran's personally gathered evidence upon Himalayan and other sanitarial sites for troops. Influenced many will be by this report, and as we are ourselves fully impressed with the simplicity of his plans, and the economy with which they might be carried out, we have, in the subjoined, quoted the more salient recommendations of a pamphlet we have not inattentively perused.

The author specifically recommends Kussowlic and other stations on the slopes of the Himalayas for sanatoria. He says:—"Would that even at this eleventh hour we might turn to better account the splendid sanatoria that stud so thickly the slopes of the Himalayas! When I stood before the monument of the Buffs, and read its terrible inscription—which I was unfortunately unable to copy at the time—and saw that it was inscribed to the memory of two officers, three colour-sergeants, three sergeants, six corporals, fourteen drummers, one hundred and eleven men, sixteen women, and forty-three children, and reflected that similar, though, perhaps, not equally aggravated records, might be found in the principal graveyards of India, I was strongly affected, and turning towards the great mountains, whose mighty outlines could be dimly traced in the distance, I reflected that, had their sides been more freely availed of, this and similar sacrifices would never have taken place. Had the 36th been in the hills in 1869, instead of at Peshawur, they would not have lost, as they did, 120 men, eleven children, seven women, and one officer; neither would the 104th have lost 103 souls at Morar; nor the 58th been more than decimated, as it was, at Allahabad."

"In reviewing the history of hill sanitation in India some ugly facts are brought to light, which are as much calculated to startle us by their novelty as they are to sadden us by their surroundings. Among these the most discouraging are, that though the advantages of hill sanatoria have been known for years, and though their praises have been sounded so long as almost to tire by repetition, yet it is only within a comparatively recent period that they have been turned to any account at all, and meanwhile epidemic disease has been stalking with impunity through the plains, and numbering its victims by thousands. Heretofore very great difficulties existed in the way of sending troops in large numbers to the hills, but these have been removed in great part, and even now a regiment could reach Kussowlic within a week of its arrival in Bombay. Were regiments sent to the hills instead of to Hyderabad or Peshawur, we should hear no more of the horrors of cholera, and there would be a stop put to that drain of time-expired men which one daily witnesses during the cold weather in India in the persons of robust, well-fed, disciplined men, who are in the prime of life, and in the very flush and vigour of their manliness, and who leave a country which can ill dispense with their services for one in which the labour-market is often overstocked, to recruit the ranks of pauperism at home or of rowdiness in America, or who return again to India with possibly diminished health, and certainly at a threefold penalty to the public.

"There is another advantage in sending whole regiments rather than detached parties to the hills, and that is, that the men are kept together under their own officers, with all their own comrades and home associations about them, instead of being knocked about, as they call it, under men whose voices sound strangely in their ears, and to whose ways they are unaccustomed.

"Were I asked," proceeds Mr. Curran, "to propose a remedy for the diseases and dangers incidental to service in the climate of India, I would point at once, and without a shadow of hesitation, to the Himalayas as a residence for healthy European troops during the summer, and to camps of exercise or cantonments in the plains during the winter. The marching to and from these, the duties performed in them, the renewal of old acquaintanceship, and the emulation that would insensibly spring up between the different regiments, would afford the men composing them an amount of pleasurable exercise and enjoyment which they can rarely hope to enjoy under the present regime; and the plains of India afford scope for manœuvring troops on a scale and under a sky which have no equal at that season elsewhere in the world. The great plains that stretch along the Sutlej and the Jhelum would accommodate hosts, compared with which the mightiest armies of Europe would sink into insignificance, and the duldest could scarcely fail of being influenced by the glorious memories that attach to the banks of these classic streams."

One political advantage of concentrating troops in the hills is that they might be sent at once in overwhelming numbers to any threatened point, and so turned to more immediate account than they could possibly be now.—Broad Arrow.

MILITARY.—The following promotions will be made in her Majesty's Indian forces in consequence of the death, which occurred at Clifton on the 20th ult., of General F. Farquharson, Bombay Infantry:—Lieutenant-General Sir John Campbell, B.B., K.C.S.I., Madras Infantry, to be General, and Major-General C. Troup, C.B., Bengal Infantry, to be Lieutenant-General. These promotions will also remove a most popular and deserving officer, Colonel Louis Wyatt, of the 11th regiment, from the Brigade Staff of the Bengal Infantry. Colonel Wyatt became a Brigadier-General on the establishment in January 1869.

ARMY PROMOTION.—In connection with the recent orders issued relative to the first appointment and promotion of officers, a Royal warrant has been issued stating that a student of the University of Oxford must pass the examination known as "Moderations," in order to qualify him for a commission. The word "Responsions," in a warrant issued on Oct. 30 last, is to be cancelled, and the word "Moderations" substituted. A quartermaster who is recommended for promotion by the Commander-in-Chief, and passes a certain professional examination, may be granted a commission as lieutenant, provided that he has served twelve months as quartermaster.

AGRICULTURE IN INDIA.—The appointment of Lord Northbrook to be Governor-General of India is favourably considered by the Cotton Supply Reporter, which says that the Department of Agriculture, already in existence in connection with revenue and commerce, will be specially recommended to his attention, in order that its efficiency may not be impaired by its tripartite alliance. The views entertained on this and other subjects by the association, which has made it a special object to find out the most effectual means of developing the agricultural resources of India and increasing the production of cotton, will be formally submitted to Lord Northbrook in a document that will reach Calcutta soon after his arrival.

MR. BAYLEY'S WILL.—The will of Thomas Butterworth Charles Bayley, Esq., formerly of the Bengal Civil Service, and late of Wynberg, near Capetown, in the colony of the Cape of Good Hope, who died at Wynberg, December 29 last, was proved in London, on the 15th ult., under £35,000 personalty in England, the acting executor in this country being Daniel Bayley, Esq. The will is dated August 29, 1871. The testator states that he considers the breeding of good horses to be of great importance to the future agricultural prosperity of the colony, to which end he gives various sums to prove their merits by a trial of strength and mettle; firstly, £500, from which £50 shall be withdrawn annually as a donation to the "Breeder's Prize," or produce stock for colts and fillies, three years old, at the Capetown April races, till the whole amount is expended; secondly, £500, from which £50 is to be annually given to the Trial Stakes for two-year-old colts and fillies; next, £1,000, from which an annual donation, to be called "Bayley's Memorial," being a prize of 100 guineas, to be run for at the autumn meetings, added to the sweepstakes of £5 each, for all horses bred in the colony; and £500, of which £25 is to be annually given to the Caledonian Races; and also £500, £25 annually for the Swellendam Races.

RETIREMENT OF INDIAN OFFICERS.—We have reason to fear that the hopes raised by Mr. Grant Duff's reply in the House are not likely to be realised, for we are informed on good authority that no general retiring scheme is under consideration at the India-office. It is well known that for some time a feeling of uneasiness in the Indian Army has existed, based upon a rumour that several officers in the three Presidencies were to be made to retire volens volens. We are now told that even the present Secretary of State has been convinced that he cannot carry into effect so objectionable a measure, and that it is necessary in the cases of these selected officers to hold out some inducement to retire, and it is therefore intended to offer to each one on the selected list a certain addition to the retired pension claimable under existing regulations, but what is to be done if the offer is declined our informant states has not yet been considered. The liberal treatment of the Ordnance Corps naturally led to the inference that Mr. Grant Duff's reply foreshadowed something of the same kind for the Staff Corps, but the actuaries we believe have given as a reason for adhering to the repeated announcement of successive Secretaries of State, that no further bonus would be offered, the astounding fact that it is peculiarly better to allow officers to remain in such a climate as India upon full pay, rather than to permit them to return permanently to England upon their retiring pensions, and a small addition as compensation for the prospective loss of off- reckonings. Need more be said to justify the opening words of this short article?—Home News.

A NEW EXPLOSIVE.—We learn from the Globe that an important experiment was tried at Wimbledon on the 21st ultimo. The party consisted of men of science, members of the London press, and persons commercially interested in what was about to be done. A clump of fifteen boards, each an inch thick, was placed before an iron target, at the distance of thirty yards from the firing point. Then out of a black bag was taken a sealed and stamped cartridge. With this a rifle was loaded. One of the party fired, and a bullet, sweeping through the fifteen boards, flattened itself against the iron. Next, another cartridge, identical in external appearance, was placed in the rifle and discharged. But this time the bullet lodged itself in the twelfth board, with its strength exhausted. The question was solved. The first cartridge was filled with fifty grains of a newly-invented gun-cotton, and the second with an equal number of the best gunpowder now in use. Numerous other shots were fired at the same distance, and at distances varying from thirty yards to 200—all with the same result. It was clear from calculation that fifty grains of the newly-invented explosive are as potential as eighty-four of gunpowder. There were seven shots altogether fired at the distance named, and with the following results:—No. 1, 50 grains gun-cotton, through 15 1-in. boards, completely flattened against iron target. No. 2, 50 grains powder, stopped in 12th board; No. 3, 50 grains gun-cotton, through and completely flattened; No. 4, 50 grains gun-cotton, through and completely flattened; No. 5, 50 grains powder, in 11th plank; No. 6, 84 grains powder, through and deformed; No. 7, 50 grains gun-cotton, through and completely flattened. The gunpowder used was the well-known Curtis and Harvey's No. 6, and the rifle a breech-loading Henry. All present agreed that the circumstances under which the test was made were fair, and that the superiority of the new gun-cotton over the powder was immense. The cotton has, however, an advantage other than that of its explosive force. It does not foul the barrel; it is almost smokeless; the report is slighter; and the recoil produced much less than that of gunpowder. But the great merit of the invention, which is due to Mr. Robert Punshon, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, is in the safety of the new agent. We have all heard of the disasters at Stowmarket, and know the terrible risks to which those engaged in the manufacture of gunpowder and gun-cotton are exposed. That used at Wimbledon is said to have the advantage over them of being perfectly safe under manipulation, and it costs only about half the price of gunpowder.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

THE INDIAN MAHOMMEDANS.

The Saturday Review allows that a thoughtful and educated Mahommedan of the present day may well be pardoned if he looks back on the legacies bequeathed by his Sovereigns to the Indian Empire with feelings of pride, and possibly with others which we have no great desire to analyse. The worship of one God, a graceful, polished, and useful literature, splendid architectural monuments, an improved system of collecting revenue, and even of dispensing justice—these are certainly to be ranked in the category of benefits and reforms. And we may add that, in spite of some wholesale conversions and a good deal of fanatical intolerance, the conquered Hindoo had no permanent barrier raised against his advancement, and was often enabled to attain to eminence in the Councils of the Emperor or the service of the State. On the other hand, we are compelled to declare our conviction that, if the Mahommedans are at present placed at a disadvantage in competing for prizes in the public service, the result is in a large degree due to themselves. Since the introduction of British rule, or certainly during the last forty years, no class of our fellow-subjects has been placed under any disability or disqualification. The difficulties long experienced by Roman Catholics and Dissenters in England have had no parallel whatever in Indian government. Nor was there any antecedent reason why Mahommedans as well as Hindoos should not turn out excellent Judges of Small Cause Courts, plead ably at the Bar, use the English language in debates and addresses, and sit with barrister and civilian Judges on the benches of the High Court. British statesmen have as clear a right to introduce English as the language of business and the avenue of preferment as the Mogul Emperors had to introduce Persian. And it is wholly unreasonable for the Mahomedans and their partisans to insist that greater prominence should be given in our Indian Universities and Colleges to Arabic and Persian classics, and, as a natural consequence, that some ill-defined rewards or some unexplained public careers should be reserved for students who can quote Sadi and recite the "Seven Poems." The Mussulmans, like the race which they overthrew, must cheerfully accept the new order which has sprung out of their chaos, must remember that they are after all but one-eighth of the population, and must reflect that taxes are better raised for a scheme of railways and telegraphs than for the completion of the Taj Mahal on its original design. Where Mussulmans have set themselves in earnest to compete with Hindoos there has been no lack of success. They have shown themselves active policemen, attached servants, brave soldiers, wise statesmen, and excellent English scholars. No more signal instance of loyalty and devotion is to be found in the annals of the Mutiny than that of the Nawab on whom tardy honours were lately bestowed at Lucknow. No native Minister stands higher than Salar Jung. No principality has been better governed than the State of Bhopal. But these examples will not solve the Mahomedan difficulty any more than the chivalrous loyalty of the late Viceroy will negative the existence of discontent among Fenians in Ireland, or disprove the necessity for overawing disaffection and treason by a judicious reserve of force.

TRIAL OF THE ASSASSIN SHERE ALI AT PORT BLAIR.—The following grounds of judgment and finding are from the official report of the trial just published:—Grounds of judgment: Although one point in this lamentable case is not thoroughly and satisfactorily established, viz., the exact spot from which the assassin came when he made his attack on the late Viceroy, there is ample evidence as to the facts of the assassination and the identification of the prisoner before the Court as the perpetrator of this foul deed. It would appear that the man who stabbed the Viceroy was concealed behind or near the blocks of stone lying on the right hand side of the pier, and that he sprang from his hiding-place when the Viceroy had passed him. This is the only explanation afforded by the evidence, as none of the witnesses saw him pass from behind except Lieutenant Hawkins, R.N., and Colonel Jervois. The evidence of these witnesses conclusively connect the assassin with the man who was at the time pinioned by the police, and is undoubtedly the defendant. The ninth and tenth witnesses no doubt helped to seize the defendant after he had been knocked down by the police, and it is probable that the tenth witness took the knife out of defendant's hand; but it is quite clear that their evidence as to being the first person to secure the defendant is not to be relied upon. The facts in evidence, coupled with the man's admissions on several occasions, and his plea of guilty before the magistrate who first investigated the case, leave no doubt as to the guilt of the defendant. Finding: The Court finds the prisoner Shere Ali, No. 15557, a life convict, guilty of the offence specified in the charge, namely, that he, the said Shere Ali, No. 15557, committed murder, and has thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 302 of the Indian Penal Code, and the Court directs that the said Shere Ali, No. 15557, suffer death by being hanged by the neck until he be dead, but that this sentence be not carried out until confirmed by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, to whom these proceedings are to be submitted.—D. M. STEWART, Major-General, Officiating Superintendent Port Blair and the Nicobars.

Well nigh all the indigestions give way to this simple treatment, aided by purifying and aperitive doses of Holloway's Pills, round each box of which plain "instructions" are folded. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S (Ex. Army Med. Staff)
CHLORODYNE

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the Inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's.—See Times, July 12, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Remedial Uses and Action.

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

Extracts from Medical Opinions.

The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—“Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed.”

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—“Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not ‘supply a want and fill a place.’”

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—“So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases.”

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1869, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the Inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.

CAUTION.—None genuine without the words “Dr. J. Collis Browne” on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, March 25; Agra and Madras, March 23; Calcutta, March 22.

THE latest particulars concerning Lord Mayo's murderer leave us still in the dark on some points that need clearing up. It appears indeed from Sher Ali's own admissions, that he had for some time past intended to murder some Englishman of rank. Several native witnesses depose to the grief displayed by him on hearing of the punishment awarded to his bhai Abdulla for murdering Justice Norman. The word "Bhai" means "brother" in various senses. If Abdulla was a fellow-clansman, a brother-Afridi, we get one clear motive for Sher Ali's act. It also appears that he himself had always regarded the sentence passed on him for his share in the murder at Peshawur as a piece of great injustice. A good many criminals hold the same view in their own case, but this untutored Afghan, bred up in deeds of blood, may really have thought himself an ill-used man. The night before his execution he bade his visitor "tell Pollock that he did a great injustice to Sher Ali." The fate of Abdulla may have given new strength to his craving for revenge on somebody; and the religious turn which his mind seemed to take at Port Blair would tend to draw his revengeful feelings to a head against the apparent arch-foe to Islam. The feast he gave his comrades a few days before the murder may or may not have had any special significance. He appears to have been latterly much depressed by the failure of his friends' efforts to get his old sentence remitted. On the other hand it seems certain that several of the Wahabi leaders were undergoing their sentences at Port Blair; and it is likely enough, however far from proven, that they may have found in Sher Ali a willing, or at least an unconscious tool for their own purposes.

FROM various conversations held with Sher Ali in prison, it appears that he had heard of Lord Mayo's intended visit two months before it came off. As soon as the guns announced the Viceroy's landing, he went and sharpened his knife. While Lord Mayo was going up Mount Harriet, Sher Ali dogged his steps, creeping through the jungle that skirted the road. It was not however till he saw General Stewart walking beside the Viceroy, that he felt sure of the latter's identity, dressed as he was in plain clothes. He then resolved to kill them both on the morrow. But when General Stewart fell behind on the pier, Sher Ali at once seized the favourable moment for killing at any rate the more eminent victim. To the last he gloried in having slain "the greatest Sahib in India," and he hoped that his countrymen would raise a monument to his memory. In prison he sometimes gave way to sudden bursts of ferocity. On one occasion he fell upon the English soldier quartered in his cell, stunned him with his heavy handcuffs, snatched away his bayonet, and would have murdered him but for timely help from outside. On another he turned upon one of two sentries, but was prevented by the second from doing any serious harm. To Mr. Lambert, who had spoken more civilly than some of his visitors, he showed a sharp-edged stone he had kept in readiness for him or some other European who might have come in his way at the last. When he heard that his family would not be punished for his crime, his countenance brightened up. To the last he retained his invincible composure, smiling defiantly as he answered the last question put to him, and stepping on to the scaffold as one sure of going to Paradise. It was something of a disappointment to him that the execution was to be so private. After he had said a prayer or two with his face turned towards Mecca, the drop fell, but by some misadventure his neck was not broken, and he died hard.

THE passage of the Native Marriage Bill was delayed in its very last stage by Mr. Inglis, who moved to confine its working to the Brahmo Somaj. The Madras member, Mr. Robinson, spoke vehemently against the idea of redressing the wrongs of 20,000 petitioners by a measure which would spread "the malaria of ill-judged legislation among five times as many millions." Two or three more of the provincial members took the same side. Against them Sir R. Temple made a dashing speech, followed by a more workmanlike one from Mr. F. Stephen, and some brief but weighty remarks from Lord Napier, the Acting Viceroy. The Bill, however, passed through Council, and appears to have given general satisfaction outside.

LIEUT.-COLONEL MAXWELL of the Punjab Commission is to be Resident at Kashmere during the coming season. Mr. H. S. Cunningham acts as Advocate-General at Calcutta in the room of Mr. Graham coming home on leave. Major Parsons acts as Deputy Commissioner of Ludiana in the place of the still suspended Mr. Cowan. Mr. H. W. Wellesley, of the Madras Civil Service, is to be Under-Secretary to the Indian Government during the absence of Mr. A. P. Howell.

THE Mohammedan festival of the Mohurram passed off quietly enough in most parts of India. Some little rioting however is reported from Bombay, Moradabad, and one or two other places.

THE FEELING in India with regard to Lady Mayo's pension seems to be one of disappointment at the smallness of it, and of hope that the amount may be doubled out of the Imperial Treasury. We hope it may, but Mr. Lowe's last answer to Lord R. Gower was not encouraging.

DURING the week ending March 12, many cases of cholera occurred among the soldiers and coolies moving between Tipai Mukh and Cachar, on their return from the Loshai country. The 44th N.I. suffered severely, nearly thirty cases having proved fatal.

WHEN the Rev. James Long, the learned and widely respected missionary, left Bengal on his way home, two thousand ryots assembled to bid farewell to their popular champion.

THE Nizam's Dominions appear to be just now reverting to the unsettled condition of former days. The people of Hyderabad have always been anything but quiet neighbours, and even the able government of Sir Salar Jung appears to have failed in keeping them under due control. If the accounts that find their way into the Madras papers are at all true, Lord Napier's warnings with regard to the duty of keeping a strict watch on the Native States within and beyond our borders need no justification. One mail brings news of a riotous attack by a mob on a traveller in a public bungalow, the doors and windows of which were battered in with stones and other missiles. Another tells of outrages inflicted on a colonel of an English regiment, who was cruelly beaten and robbed. Again, we hear of a survey party being set upon and maltreated by a mob of ruffians. The roads are reported unsafe for travellers, and so perilous has become the journey from Madras or Bombay across Hyderabad, that travellers are now furnished by Sir Salar Jung with armed escorts for their protection. According to the Madras Times the police force on the Kirnool frontier has been considerably strengthened in view of the growing turbulence of the Nizam's subjects. One reason for these unpleasant phenomena may be found perhaps in the alarm and irritation caused among a race of fanatic Mohammedans, by the influx of Feringhie foreigners consequent on the making of a State Railway through Hyderabad. That the presence of European engineers and surveyors among a people traditionally unruly and impatient of English interference should lead to such ebullitions of angry feeling, was almost inevitable; but there is reason to fear that other influences may have helped in producing so undesirable a state of things. It is said that the administrative reforms carried out by Sir Salar Jung have sorely offended his bigoted and conservative countrymen, and it is feared that their discontent has been sharpened by the spread of Wahabi doctrines. The Minister's unpopularity is aggravated by the popular dislike to his English friends. Altogether there would seem to be good reason for not reducing the strength of the Madras Army just at present.

THE Administration Report of the North-Western Provinces for 1870-71 mentions the failure of an attempt to make money out of the old salt mines at Mullona in Oudh and Karour, in the Jaunpore district. Of 7,500 maunds manufactured from April to June, only 131 were sold, and the experiment had to be given up, with a loss reckoned at £2,500 on the Karour works alone. In March, 1870, the Infanticide Act became law. All districts or villages containing less than 40 girls to 100 boys were placed under the Act. It thus appeared that in the Boondshuhar district alone eighteen Rajpoot villages were found wanting in the right proportion of girls. Thirty-three Goojar, twenty-eight Jat, four Aheer, and six Meea villages were also entered in the same category. In June an experimental farm, in charge of a Scotch gardener, was opened near Boondshuhar. At the end of the season it yielded 1,822 lbs. of clean cotton, worth Rs. 396. This was obtained from Hingunghat, New Orleans, and other seeds; Egyptian and Sea Island turning out worst. There is hope of better things from the farm this year.

OUT of more than thirty million inhabitants, the North-Western Provinces contain 25,656,198 Hindoos, 4,205,544 Mohammedans, while the remaining half-million are Christians, Jains, and aborigines. The agricultural interest is very strong, numbering close upon 18 millions. One of the most populous districts is Benares. With very few and small exceptions the language spoken throughout the province is either Hindi or Urdu. There are 3½ million Brahmans—priests, traders, farmers—to more than 2½ million Rajpoots, who farm or take service. More than 3½ million Chumars, or leather workers and farm servants, form the great bulk of the lowest castes. The two chief agricultural castes make up about 2½ millions, while the two castes of herdsmen amount to nearly 2½ millions. The Kahar, or "bearer" caste, numbers 693,519, and the Banyas or traders 383,202. Of the other Hindu castes, such as Jats, writers, oilmen, blacksmiths, carpenters, barbers, potters, &c., the numbers vary from three hundred thousand carpenters to five hundred and sixty-seven thousand shepherds.

DURING the year 1870-71 the 3½ per cent. income-tax in these provinces yielded only 26 lakhs or £260,000, obtained from 66,135 persons. Crime of every kind showed a marked decrease on the two previous years. Of the 19,333 daily in prison, about half were under instruction. Seventy-six per cent. of persons arrested were found guilty, but Sir W. Muir will not be satisfied until the proportion has risen to 80 per cent. The police, of whom there is one to every 1,370 inhabitants, are blamed not for want of detective skill against criminals of what may be called the higher class, but for inertness in dealing with common thieves and burglars. More attention, thinks the Lieutenant Governor, should be paid to the "watch and ward" system, and to the efficiency of the village police. To every police station should be attached a chowkidar or two, well acquainted with the habits of criminals in their own neighbourhood. Of the 480,373 deaths reported in the year two-thirds are ascribed to fever which raged chiefly in seven districts. Not many died of small-pox or cholera. Three candidates took high degrees at the University, one of them being a Mohammedan. In the B.A. examination four out of five passed and 114 out of 175 matriculated. The number of newspapers increased from 26 to 33, with a circulation of 7,509 copies, of which Government took 2,910. Twenty papers are written in Urdu and six in Hindi. Bicycle postmen are employed at Allahabad, Cawnpore, and Agra, and the practice is to be extended to all the chief post-offices.

In these days of free and easy intercourse between countries the most remote from each other, it is not very surprising to hear that an apostle of woman's rights has made her way from America to Hindustan. There is not much in common between the social habits of the two countries; but ladies like Miss Olivia Warbut, LL.D., feel a proper pride in cracking nuts of unusual hardness, and the attempts already making to deliver the women of India from the thralldom of the zenana have doubtless nerved that particular lady for the task she appears to have undertaken. With the usual courage of her sex, Miss Warbut will hear of no half-measures in claiming for woman equal rights with man. Her logical instincts abhor compromise. She has vowed to carry the banner of woman's rights into the last stronghold of man's supremacy, the married state. She has begun, in short, to preach to the ladies of India the gospel, in her own country not a very new one, of free love. In a letter to an Indian paper, Miss Warbut declares that "the doctrine of woman's rights, keyed up and completed by the gospel of free love, is the principle which is destined to renovate the world, and which even British prejudice must yield to before many years are past." It will be a curious world when this new doctrine comes into general practice, and women change their husbands as often as they please without even the trouble of going through the Divorce Court. But we fear that our great-grandchildren will hardly live to see so blissful a consummation, so glorious an instance of the converse process to that by which, according to modern theories, man has been gradually evolved from the brute. Young Bengal indeed has learned to swallow a good many prejudices; but if Miss Warbut hopes to find him an apt pupil in this crusade against woman's duties, it is not unlikely that she will soon discover her mistake.

ONE part of Mr. Grant Duff's reply to questions asked on Tuesday last by Sir James Elphinstone, touching the grievances of Indian officers, will have been heard with some surprise by other people than his querist. When the answers of the Indian Government to certain queries laid before them by the Duke of Argyll were forwarded to England, it was found that Lord Napier's name was conspicuous by its absence from the Despatch of December 28, 1870. In a previous letter of September 20, Lord Mayo's Government, including Lord Napier of Magdala, had declared its belief that the instructions conveyed in Lord Cranborne's Despatch of August, 1866 had been carried out "with due regard to the interests of the officers concerned." Before December however a very different opinion had been recorded by the Governments of Madras and Bombay, to the effect that the officers had not received substantial justice in respect of their claims to bonus compensation. In forwarding home the minutes of these Governments, the Indian Government still adhered as a body to its former opinion; but the letter containing this avowal was remarkable for lacking the signature of Lord Napier. Only one meaning could be fairly put upon this.

Silence in such a case implied dissent from the opinion of Lord Napier's colleagues. The Under-Secretary for India however had his answer ready, such as it was. He "did not at all know what view Lord Napier of Magdala took of the opinions of the Governments of Madras and Bombay." His Lordship "had not given the Imperial Government any reason to suppose that he dissented from the view of the Government to which he belonged." In such an answer there may be official wisdom; but if nothing was kept back by the speaker, it is certainly curious that no attempt should have been made to ascertain what Lord Napier really thought, and why his name should have been thus markedly absent from a letter signed by the rest of his colleagues. Did he or did he not dissent from the opinions of the minor Governments, on a question specially affecting the interests of the officers under his command? If not, why did he hesitate to put his name to a despatch written "in continuation" of one he had already signed? If there had been any other reason for his silence than the one which most readily suggests itself, would not the mouthpiece of the India Office have taken care to divulge it? And would not the uncertainty implied in the having "no reason to suppose" a particular event have been exchanged for an express denial of the event itself?

WHAT the opinions of the Madras and Bombay Governments were on this matter, our readers may have seen more than a year ago. It may be as well however to repeat them here as briefly as we can. The Government of Bombay in a Minute of November 15, 1870, declared that "the manner in which the question of compensation for the loss of bonus has been dealt with, has not been strictly in the interests of the officers concerned. On the contrary it has been looked at from what may be called the actuary's point of view." Sir S. Fitzgerald therefore proposed to "allow a repayment of all sums actually sunk in purchase, and for which no return has been received beyond enhanced pay." Sir A. Spencer, Commander-in-Chief of Bombay, pointed out in detail the injustice inflicted by the terms of Lord Cranborne's Despatch. The Government of Madras went still further, reminding the Secretary of State, that, "while under the old régime officers received all the advantages of accelerated promotion and a bonus on retirement, under the arrangements sanctioned by Lord Cranborne they received only the difference between payments made and immediate advantages gained; no provision whatever having been made for the ultimate advantage of a bonus on retirement."

LADY MAYO arrived from Paris at the Victoria Terminus on the afternoon of Wednesday last, and was there received by Mr. Disraeli, the friend and colleague of her late husband. His appearance on such an occasion was appropriate enough; but as no other name is mentioned in company with his, we are left to infer that none of the present Ministers joined in paying that little token of respect for the memory of a Viceroy who had died in the service not of any political party, but of the nation itself. It was the accident of his being a Conservative that sent Lord Mayo out to India; but in that country nobody thinks of asking whether its leading statesmen are Tories or Liberals. A Viceroy's political antecedents are soon forgotten in the character he makes for himself out there, and we should have thought that the same oblivion would have marked the reception of his widow and family in England. Could none of the Ministry have been spared from the arduous duties of a Parliamentary Wednesday, to receive with becoming courtesy the widow of one whose merits have been freely acknowledged by men of all parties? Or can it be that none of them at that moment cared to face the lady whose pension they have virtually declined to raise, even at the invitation of some at least among their own supporters?

THE telegraph informs us that Lord Northbrook, after paying a visit to M. de Lesseps at Ismailia, proceeded thence on the 8th April through the Canal on his way to Suez.

THE HISTORY OF CHOLERA.

AN important contribution to the history of that dreadful disease which, under the name of cholera, has so often during this century ravaged Europe, has just appeared from the pen of a former surgeon in the Indian Army, Dr. John Macpherson.* The popular belief, to which the late Cholera Conference at Constantinople gave fresh currency, is that the epidemic which raged in Bengal in 1817 had then for the first time shown itself in the East, and that the Sunderbunds were its original birth-place. Dr. Macpherson however has here brought together a body of evidence, not all new, but most of it conclusive, to show that cholera prevailed from time to time in various parts of India, at least as far back as the year 1503, and was known in Europe from the beginning of the present era, if not before. The European name of the disease indeed has descended to us from the time of Hippocrates, that is, from the fifth century B.C.; and his description of it tallies closely enough with modern experience. Celsus and his successors in the first century after Christ go still more particularly into the symptoms and treatment of the cholera of their day; not forgetting the fever which sometimes follows the decline of the disease itself. Cholera is also mentioned under an Indian name in Sanskrit books which date at the very latest from the second century of our era. In the books of old Tamil physicians of uncertain date several forms are described of what is evidently the same disease, although we have no indications of its prevalence as an epidemic. The old Hindu remedies bear a curious resemblance to those still prescribed by natives and even Europeans in Bengal. Cholera epidemics seem from a very early date to have been known in China and Japan.

Galen makes little reference to the disease, but a Greek writer of A.D. 360 forestalls the modern practice of helping the body to get rid of the morbid matter which seems to produce the spasms. In the tenth and eleventh centuries a disease closely corresponding with cholera is described by Arab writers in Bagdad. From time to time fresh notices of cholera appear in the writings of European doctors. However different in various points, all these descriptions, whether of Eastern or Western writers, agree in their broad features, especially in treating the disease as one of varying but often fatal intensity. From the beginning of the sixteenth century, similar notices become more frequent, more detailed, more in harmony with modern experiences of epidemic cholera. The first recorded outbreak of an epidemic character took place at Goa in 1513, only eleven years before a similar outbreak known to have occurred at Nismes. Along the coasts of Malabar and Canara the disease continued to prevail intermittently down to 1817, the year of the first great Indian epidemic. During the seventeenth century it broke out badly from time to time in France, Belgium, and other parts of Europe, and finally made its way as an epidemic to our own country. A bad epidemic appears to have prevailed in Marwar in 1681-2, and another at Goa in 1684. A similar pestilence raged at Surat from that year to 1690. In the latter half of the eighteenth century cholera was a frequent visitor of the Malabar and Coromandel coasts, and broke out once at least in Calcutta. After the outbreak of 1781 it never reappeared in Bengal until 1817, since which time it has never quite ceased to lurk there. Before that time Bengal had been peculiarly free from a disease which had become endemic in many parts of Southern India. In the outbreak of 1817 no new symptom was recorded, nor did the disease differ in its development and general features from many previous outbreaks. It had "often spread widely before," says Dr. Macpherson, "and it can at most be said that this power of spreading was intensified," in the epidemic of 1817.

THE PERSPIRING STATUE OF GIRNAR.

If Christian priests in Europe spur the piety of their flocks with holy wafers, winking statues of the Virgin, and bottles of miraculously melting blood, the holy men of Girnar in Katiawar set no little store for the same purpose by their Amijhara or Perspiring Statue of Parisnāth. This wonderful cynosure of Jain devotion appears, till the other day, to have been religiously guarded from prying Feringhie eyes, in a secret vault beneath one of the dozen temples that adorn the granite slopes of Mount Girnar in the Mohammedan State of Joonaghur. Mrs. Postans, the author of "Western India in 1838," heard of its existence and its perspiring habits, but never saw the image itself. Mr. Burgess also described it from hearsay in his "Notes on Somnath," as "a large white marble image, held in the most superstitious veneration by the sect, and to conceal which the pujaries will tell any number of lies each in succession contradicting the preceding." None of our Political Agents in Katiawar has ever seen it, not even the popular Colonel Lang, who made the attempt, but failed. When Sir Seymour Fitzgerald visited the mountain last year, he too failed to gain admission into the sacred cavern, in spite of the influence which the Joonaghur authorities brought to bear upon its guardians.

At length however a bold Englishman, who under the signature of "A. W.," has just written an account of his experiences in the Bombay Gazette, succeeded last January in exploring the forbidden shrine. With the help of an intelligent native supplied by the Joonaghur Durbar, he managed somehow to shirk the kind attentions of the Arab ruffians who guard the temples on Mount Girnar. After going round the temples in company with a few Jain priests, he stopped before the entrance to the secret shrine, and apparently surprised his guides into unlocking the door that led into it by an underground passage. A light was struck, and he soon found himself in a small chamber about six feet high, containing four statues. One of these, the Amijhara itself, is a large statue of Parisnāth, one of the twenty-four Jain deities, who sits squatting, with the soles of his feet resting on his thighs. It is made of "very fine close white marble," with silver covers on the soles of the feet, silver ornaments on the body and wrists, and a silver plate let into the fleshy part of the upper arm, at the shoulder. At the right knee a small trough, about a foot long and half a foot deep, is placed to receive the perspiration. Parisnāth was the last but one of twenty-four heroes or sages, whose virtues and wisdom raised them, according to Jain tradition, into gods—a Hindu development of the principle that underlies the worship of Buddha. A like process tends in India to overlay the simple faith of Islam with the worship of a number of glorified Mussulman saints. The growth of the same process in other countries will readily suggest itself to those who compare the religion of the early Christians with that of modern Rome.

"A. W." saw no traces of perspiration upon the statue of Parisnāth, but the absence of such traces in the month of January he admits to be no argument against the likelihood of its tendency to perspire at other times. As in the case of the liquefying blood of St. Januarius, he is ready to accept a rational explanation of the alleged marvel. The hot season being the time when Parisnāth is specially given to perspiring, it at once occurred to him that a simple reason for such behaviour might easily be supplied in the number of heated worshippers who at that moist season—it is moist in Western India—throng the cool recesses of the Amijhara shrine. "Sunk as it is in the rock, the statue must be a good deal colder at that season than the air which may be allowed to gain admission to it, and when the close excavated apartment is filled by relay after relay of panting and perspiring pilgrims, the moisture of their breath must be condensed in considerable quantities upon the cold smooth marble." If some of the pilgrims, more pious than the rest, remained upon their knees some time after the others had gone, would not the mysterious idol sweat more freely than ever in seeming answer to their prayers? The solution is simple, if not self-evident, to people who reason about what they see and hear. But the race of pilgrims never yet stooped to so worldly a process, nor are Hindoos of any sect remarkable for tracing events to natural causes. So long as a large number of foolish people are willing to believe that the sweating of a marble image betokens a direct blessing from above on its faithful worshippers, their spiritual guides will be in no great hurry to undeceive them, even if they do not share the delusion or reap its profits themselves. We are not surprised to hear that another Englishman, who has since attempted to reach the dwelling-place of this moist divinity, has been utterly baffled by its watchful guardians, and that even "A. W.'s" bold attendant looked upon the sudden death of his brother-in-law as a kind of "judgment" for his share in "A. W.'s" unhallowed enterprise.

THE SONTHALS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—With reference to your remarks in page 387 of your paper of the 8th inst., on the state of the Sonthal country, I venture to suggest that Mr. George Campbell is much better qualified to deal with the Sonthal difficulty than Lord Northbrook can be.

What does the Home Government expect will be the result of placing the Sonthal Pergunnahs under the direct control of the Viceroy? The administration will be transferred from Mr. George Campbell, one of the most experienced of our Indian statesmen, to some irresponsible Under-secretary, or to some other official, who, under the protection of the Viceroy's name, may order many unjustifiable measures.

His Excellency the Viceroy has already ten times more work than he can properly perform. No mistake can be greater than to load the Governor-general with extra work, which can be better performed by his subordinates, and which may bring him down to the grave under the consciousness that his work has not been well done. Whatever principles of Government are required in the administration of the Sonthal Pergunnahs can be declared by Lord Northbrook, and carried into execution by Mr. Campbell far more effectually than by the appointment of some Commissioner with arbitrary authority to destroy rights which we have recognised, and courts of justice which we have established.

No one can have seen with greater grief than myself the determination of the Government of India to assist landed proprietors to dispose of their lands with the same reckless extravagance which they on occasions display in parting with movable property, forgetting that in India there are duties as well as rights connected with land. We cannot dispense with the duties required from landowners; we have acknowledged this truth in various laws and Acts in force throughout India, and neither in peace nor in war can mere usurers, women and children, efficiently take the place of the native chiefs. In peace time landowners are required to take measures for preventing robberies, and for raising the hue and cry after dacoits and murderers; in war we require them to protect the railroads and telegraphs, and to give us speedy and sure information regarding rebels. We require in landowners men of influence, and not moneylenders, disliked by the whole community.

But as usurers have been encouraged to lend their money on the vain pretext that it will be expended on the improvement of land, and have been promised the protection of the law, and its assistance in realising both the principal of and unlimited interest on their loans, can we in honour turn round on them and declare that they have exacted too much interest, and that we, therefore, refuse any longer to be the tools of extortioners?

This is the question which Lord Northbrook has to answer. For more than ten years Government has facilitated borrowing on the security of land. I venture to assert that Mr. George Campbell is as well qualified to solve the problem of Sonthal insolvency as any statesman in India. His volume of Judicial Circulars for Oudh proves that he will be as careful of the rights of creditors as he is solicitous regarding the welfare of the Sonthal agricultural community.

Under the existing law insolvent debtors for small sums have two ways of extricating themselves:—

1. If their debts be under Rs. 100 (£10), they can free themselves from them for ever by petitioning the judge and giving up their property.

2. They need not take on themselves the burden of their father's debts if they surrender to the creditors their ancestral inheritance.

But the insolvency of landed proprietors is displayed chiefly in the shape of overwhelming mortgages. An Encumbered Estates Act cannot supply a remedy for the evil, for the ruined proprietors will not willingly leave the land, and are always ready for a rising. The best mode of preventing bloodshed will probably be to bribe the discontented to emigrate to some other part of India. They might make useful colonists in Cachar or in the wild country further eastward.

More than ten years ago a petition by an overwhelming majority of Hindoo talookhdars in Oudh implored Government to check, and not to facilitate, the transfer of land, but Government was deaf to their entreaties. Native landowners are not yet qualified, at the early age of eighteen years, to dispose of their landed property as they please.—Your obedient servant,

LORD MAYO'S ASSASSIN.

The Madras Times observes that the motives of Shere Ali are still involved in mystery. We do not even understand several important circumstances attendant upon the assassination. We do not know how, if the torches were alight round the person of the late Viceroy, the murderer could perpetrate his deed in such darkness that no one actually saw the fatal blows delivered! Nor can we understand the (subsequent?) extinction of the torches. Nor can we clearly ascertain whether Shere Ali was, or was not, himself a torch-bearer. And since we are not even absolutely certain whether or no Shere Ali actually had, as some confidently assert, an accomplice on the scene of the assassination,—seeing that we do not know even this,—how shall we determine whether the act of murder was one prompted by mere vengeance, or was the result of a deep laid scheme of the gravest political import? Certainly it appears that the Government at Calcutta know more than they choose to divulge. Statements have been made in Indian journals of repute that the assassination was the result of a conspiracy of which Shere Ali was but the willing and effectual tool. The Supreme Government has been directly challenged by a Bombay contemporary to deny such statements, or to acknowledge their truth. We have no hesitation in saying that we think the matter is too important a one to be treated with contemptuous silence. If an active conspiracy does exist to murder every man who is a conspicuous opponent of Wahabism, it is high time that the public should know of it. If Shere Ali's crime was merely the result of a personal desire for the gratification of revenge, then let us be plainly told so, and let the suspicious and mysterious parts of the whole matter be cleared up. One way or the other, the public mind should be set at rest.

The Athenæum holds that the man Shere Ali probably thought little or nothing of a future state. It was not the hopes of a future, but the memories of the past that prompted the spring from behind, and the stab in the dark. He recked not of life—his position as a prisoner in that lonely island was worse to him than death. He had been baptised with blood, and bred to the profession of murder. The value of life was nothing in his eyes. But the slightest particle of revenge for a real or imaginary wrong was that which he would be pleased to purchase at any cost. And what then could he do better than take the life of the man who was in his eyes a personification of that Government which had imprisoned him, and had not commuted his punishment by granting his prayer for a public hanging! Think of that desperate and fiery man—fierce and fiery although silent and serious—walking about that little island as a tiger—a man-eater—walks a narrow den! At length the auspicious day arrived! Again could he taste the blood of revenge—blood so ineffably sweet when once tasted. His kith and kindred were far away. They had lost their home; and their family enemies had destroyed that dear familiar village overhanging that rugged gorge which looked down upon that wide sunbright plain. He should never revisit that spot. His mother, his wife, his sister, and his brethren would never again see him! But they would hear of him! He would do a deed, the echo of which would thunder even to the heights over Peshawar! So his wild soul leapt within him. A confused notion of revenge for imaginary wrongs urged him on; and he nerved himself by silence and by a serious aspect for the great day close at hand. He had no fanatic longing for a fool's paradise. "Anywhere—anywhere—out of the world!"—was the cry that rose in his heart, and rang in his ears. His prophet, promising a vague and dim guerdon for a matchless deed, was not MAHOMET—but his own heart!

THE INDIAN SERVICES.

The Madras Athenæum holds that to insist from home upon crushing the Uncovenanted Service is simply to remove the slightest prospect of promotion from those who have no interest and no recommendation except the insipid one of fitness for office. Evidence of this has been long before us, and it is highly desirable that a nominal roll of public servants of all pensioned grades, showing when they entered the service, their first and present pay, should be published, and, where possible, their antecedents, and the grounds on which they were appointed. The Military Service is only better than the Uncovenanted because certain appointments must be filled by members of the service, because they derive strength from their homogeneity, and from some amount of brotherly feeling between even the general and the ensign. But many of them are maintained in ignominious idleness with the shame of having nothing to do and the necessity of being paid for it. And what is all the nursing of the Civil Service and its enlargement intended for? To enlarge it is to lower the prestige of individuals, to lower their average pay, and to burden the country with a fearful pension list in future and an immense civil expenditure for the present. We will quote from the Indian Observer on this subject, though we need scarcely say that we do not fear that, if our views had not been re-echoed by another journal, there would have been any danger of their being contradicted. "It is impossible," says our contemporary, "to create superior appointments in increasing ratio to subordinate offices. It is equally impossible to adopt for inferior appointments a scale of pay progressing at such a rate as to obviate permanently the necessity of changing the incumbents. There must be some correspondence between the nature of the work and the amount of the pay. Taking the very lowest salary which a passed civilian draws—five hundred rupees a month—it is sheer extravagance to pay this for work which can be done equally well by a Baboo or Eurasian on two hundred and fifty."

NATIVE LEADERS OF THE PEOPLE.

The Indian Daily News has no desire and no right to denounce the successes which pushing natives have won for themselves under the Government. Nothing succeeds like success, and no native gentleman need be ashamed of the fact that he has risen from the lowest grades of society to the highest positions of trust and responsibility under the Government. The mistake which the Government has committed is not that it has allowed or helped these enterprising persons to elevate themselves, but that it has mistaken them for native gentlemen, for the real representatives of the masses, and that in doing so it has been tempted to ignore the rights of the real representatives of our native fellow-subjects, who are the natural leaders of native society, and who alone could be of any service to us in any great revolution of the masses. Our readers may possibly be tempted to charge us with reiterating a very old truth, but the duty of reiteration will only cease when the truth is honestly recognised by the Government. The loaves and fishes of official patronage, like the benefits of education, have hitherto been monopolised by members of families which have, during the last two or three generations, grown up round our capitals and some of our larger cities. Men of this stamp, who are no doubt worthy enough people when considered by themselves, are nevertheless half Anglicised in many of their notions, and no more represent the real wealth and intelligence of the country than the three tailors of Tooley-street represented the people of England. Men of this stamp will no doubt tell us that they are quite as capable of studying the wishes and opinions of the masses of their countrymen at a distance from our capitals and larger cities as are raw English boys from home; and the retort is unanswerable so far as it goes. But it does not go very far; it does not reach the fact that, in the event of any popular uprising, the raw English boy would stick to his post and uphold the Government, whereas these "leaders of native society" would in all probability vanish from their posts on the very first symptom of danger. What England wants in the way of native officials is a class of men with family traditions, men who possess the respect and affection of the districts in which their families have been respected and loved for generations, men who can interpret the wishes of their countrymen to the Government in times of peace, and who in times of trouble will possess sufficient influence over their minds to keep them from adding to the troubles of the State. When will the Government learn that, in conferring high offices on men who have picked up a smattering of education in Calcutta, it has merely stifled the clamours of a small and uninfluential class without awakening any gratitude in the minds of the millions who have never even heard of these "leaders"? It may, we think, be quite fairly assumed that no subordinate official, who owes his social position entirely to the English Government, can possibly exercise any healthy influence over the minds of his ignorant countrymen.

MEDDLESOME PHILANTHROPISTS.—The Society for Encouraging the Spread of Disease—we beg pardon, the North-Eastern Counties Association for the Repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts—appears to have taken the natives of India also under the shelter of its motherly wing. It has lately fired off a memorial to Lord Northbrook, who has no doubt found leisure to study that and other documents of an equally exciting nature during his voyage down the Red Sea. In this memorial he is requested seriously to consider the causes of the present discontent in India, with a view to "the early and complete abrogation of all regulations affecting Indian women similar in any respect to the regulations of the Contagious Diseases Acts of the United Kingdom." These well-meaning sentimentalists, who appear to know a great deal more about India than people who have lived there for many years, have satisfied themselves that the real sources of the prevailing discontent are to be found in "the horror and indignation excited" by the laws which have been framed with a view to save large numbers of innocent persons from the infection of a loathsome and baneful disease. In this country they and their like have pretty nearly succeeded in undoing the wholesome legislation of past years, and reasserting for their interesting clients the right to undermine the health of coming generations, without let or hindrance from the powers that be. Luckily for India, their meddling philanthropy will have small effect in shaping the policy of her immediate rulers, and the new Viceroy may be expected to think oftener than twice before he allows their folly to override his own good sense.—Home News.

THE REV. J. LONG.—We saw it stated the other day that one who has loved India well, and who, through evil report and good report, has striven zealously to promote the moral and social well-being of the masses of the people, was about to leave this country for good.—we refer to the Rev. James Long of Calcutta. Though the announcement was one that could hardly be received with surprise, it could not be received but with regret. We are glad, therefore, to learn that Mr. Long's absence from the scene of his labours is intended to be merely temporary. The reverend gentleman contemplates taking only two years' sick leave, part of which he intends spending as follows:—He proceeds to Constantinople; from Constantinople to the Crimea, crossing the Black Sea to Poti, and proceeding thence by rail to Tiflis. From Tiflis Mr. Long will proceed to the Caucasus; and, after travelling there some time, will make his way to St. Petersburg. Moscow will next receive a visit, and a somewhat protracted one, owing to the special attraction that will be afforded during the summer and autumn by the great Exhibition of Arts to be held there. Mr. Long will likewise attend the International Oriental Society's meeting wherever it takes place this year, and spend the winter in London, where, during his stay, he hopes to join a small section of influential persons of special qualifications for taking up and bringing to notice questions connected with the moral and social progress of the people of India. We are sorry to learn that the reverend gentleman is in bad health; but it is gratifying to have the opinion of his medical advisers, to the effect that he can yet stand the climate of India very well, if he does not remain in the plains of Bengal during the rains. "Padre Long" is well known both in England and India as one of the few missionaries who have really lived amongst and with the natives, and who have made themselves intimately acquainted with their feelings and opinions, both social and political. Being an earnest, enthusiastic, and thoroughly honest man—a man whose whole soul is in his work, he has gained the affections of the people, and is highly respected by all who know him. The other day at Krishnagar, in the Nuddea district, there was an open air meeting of two thousand ryots to present a farewell address to Mr. Long—who delivered a reply (printed in the Hindu Patriot) which is in many respects exceedingly valuable and highly suggestive.—Times of India.

Bengal.

THE EXECUTION OF SHERE ALI.

PORT BLAIR, Feb. 27.—Shere Ali, the assassin of the lamented Governor-General, enjoys good health. He is in the custody of the Detachment of her Majesty's 2nd Battalion, 10th Regiment. He is handcuffed and has leg irons on, and since an attack which he made upon the sentry in his cell one night by striking him on the head with his hand-cuffs his irons are loosely tied together with a rope, so that he cannot get them up high enough to allow him to deal a blow. Precautions are taken that no poison shall be conveyed to him, in his food, or water, and he is allowed to go outside his cell, to get fresh air, in order that he may not cheat the gallows, or whatever fate is in store for him, by falling sick and dying.

Shere Ali had been living at Hope Town about four months when the murder was committed. He was employed as a barber for men of the 4th class, so that he had no hard work to complain of. He was known as a quiet man, keeping very much to himself, most regular in saying his prayers every day the full number of times enjoined by the Mahomedan religion, yet not interfering with any one else.

On his arrival at Port Blair Lord Mayo landed on Ross Island, and after inspecting it returned on board the Glasgow to lunch. After lunch he started in the Glasgow's steam launch with the members of his suite most immediately attached to him and General Stewart, the Superintendent of Port Blair, to visit some of the stations of the settlement. Viper Island is next in importance and number of convicts to Ross Island, and the party went to it first. It is about six miles up the harbour, and not visible from Ross Island, and Chatham Island was passed on the way to it.

The charge of the twelve stations at Port Blair is divided between the settlement officers. At Viper Island Lord Mayo was met by the deputy superintendent, who was in charge of it. The first assistant superintendent was present to receive him, and show him over Chatham Island, of which he was in charge. General Stewart alone, of the officers of the settlement, accompanied Lord Mayo to the stations of Hope Town and Mount Harriet, of which he (General Stewart) was himself in charge.

At Hope Town a guard of four free policemen and a naick awaited the Governor-General, and escorted him up to Mount Harriet, and down again. Hope Town is the small village on the north side of the harbour, at the foot of Mount Harriet, and a long jetty runs out from the shore, over a mud flat into water deep enough to allow a lighter to lie off it at low tide. The ascent of Mount Harriet begins as soon as the shore is reached, and continues to the top, along a winding road rather more than a mile long. The houses of the village of Hope Town lie in a line at right angles to the shore, and commence at the water's edge, with a station for convict police on one side, and a bunniah's shop opposite to it. The murder was committed on the jetty, twenty-five yards from the police station. Stone is quarried on the lower part of Mount Harriet, and the jetty is often encumbered with blocks waiting to be taken to Ross Island. But on the occasion of Lord Mayo's visit there were only two stones of inconsiderable size upon it, with a small heap of broken pieces, and a truck used for carrying the heavier stones from the quarries. After he had been stabbed Lord Mayo sat down upon the truck for a short time, and some of its planks were deeply stained with his blood. None of these things will be moved till orders have been received from Calcutta. The bloody planks were taken from the truck at the time of Shere Ali's trial on board the Glasgow, but the truck itself remains in the same position on the jetty.—Friend of India Correspondent.

The following letter appears in the same paper:—

"We have not succeeded in getting much further information about Shere Ali. He has in conversation told all that we are ever likely to know of the case. He says that when he heard the guns on the morning of the Viceroy's arrival he took his knife into the jungle and sharpened it. According to his own statement, he had not then formed any clear conception of what he was to do with it. He was not aware that the Governor-General was expected to visit the Northern Station until the party landed. It appears Shere Ali was in the village of Hope Town when the party passed, which he quietly joined unobserved.

"This is probably true, and he must have quietly and unobtrusively pushed his way to the front, as if he had done this violently or in any way to attract notice it must have been seen that he had not a belt on, and that he had no business there. As the petty officers allow that owing to the darkness and their attention being directed to the movements of the Governor-General, the story is probably true. I am inclined to accept it in lieu of the theory that Shere Ali was lurking behind the stones on the pier.

"Shere Ali further says that he was in doubt at first which of the party was the Governor-General, but seeing General Stewart with him seems to have decided him.

"He hinted that he wished also to stab General Stewart if he had the chance—but that he escaped by dropping behind.

"He gives no reason of his attack on Lord Mayo except that he was ordered to do it by God.

"The story that he had not long ago received a letter from his home, in which he had been informed that his brother was hanged for the murder of a judge, seems to have no foundation. He did receive a letter about the time stated from his home, but the information it contained referred chiefly to the subject of the appeal that had been made to the authorities against his conviction and sentence of transportation.

"His friends told him that they had spent all the money in unavailable appeals, and that nothing more could be done for him. This news depressed him much, and he seems to have become weary of his life ever since. He has always been a moody, morose man, very punctual in his religious observances, and exceedingly charitable to the poorest class of convicts. The injustice of his sentence of transportation always rankled in Shere Ali's mind, and up to the last moment he stated that he had been dealt unjustly with by the authorities at Peshawur.

"His demeanour in prison was most violent. The European guard seem to have treated him a little roughly now and then, and no wonder. But be the cause what it may, there is no doubt that one night he suddenly put out the light in his cell, and dashed at the sentry near him, taking hold of his bayonet and wounding him in two places, besides trying to smash him with his manacles. The sentry was only saved by crying out for his comrades and being rescued, but he still lies ill in hospital. On another occasion, when walked outside for a little exercise, he got one hand free, and clutched the bayonet off one of the sentries, who was only saved from hurt by his comrades at once knocking Shere Ali down. His whole conversation in prison was that of boast and vain glory. He said that all the Mussulmans would rejoice and would worship him after he had gone, which was all he wanted. He said he tried hard to escape after stabbing the Viceroy, and that if he had succeeded, we should never have known that he did the deed. In fact, the only wonder of Mr. Lambert and others at Port Blair is, not that he succeeded in stabbing the poor Viceroy, but how he came to be caught in the dark, for he was immensely powerful, and as quick as lightning.

"The only moment when he appeared nervous was when some one hinted that his family would be captured and punished. He was really anxious and unhappy about it for the moment. He was much dissatisfied at being hanged on the 11th (Monday) privately on Viper Island. He hoped to have a crowd round him and boast to them. He was a long time struggling; in fact it was twenty minutes before life was really extinct. The result is at present that it was private despair and revenge, probably however instigated by Wahabees or others who worked on him to do some deed of the kind. But he was a desperate man, and was determined to commit a deed of the kind."

Miscellaneous.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.—The subordinate executive Engineering service in Bengal will, in future, have the advantage of professional lectures at the Dacca and Patna Colleges.

POLITICAL.—Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon, late Persian Interpreter to Sir W. Mansfield, has been appointed by the Government of India to political employ, coupled with an appointment in the Meywar Bheel Corps. The appointment can only be an acting one.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.—The receipts of the East Indian Railway, for the week ended the 9th of March, show an increase as compared with those of the corresponding period of last year of £1,808. Those of the Jabalpur line show an increase of £858.

THE ANDAMANS.—Steam communication with the Andamans and the penal settlements thereto attached, which has hitherto been only once in six weeks, is, in future, to be monthly. Bringing these islands a little nearer to us in this way will have a good effect, and may probably be the means of working good in more ways than one.

SYMPATHY WITH LADY MAYO.—At a public meeting held at Allahabad, on Tuesday, March 18, resolutions were passed lamenting Lord Mayo's death, sympathising with Lady Mayo, and appointing a committee to collect subscriptions for a memorial to the late Viceroy in the North-Western Provinces. Sir W. Muir presided at the meeting.

UNIFORM FOR THE CIVIL SERVICE.—The present Viceroy, on being pressed to urge on the Secretary of State the desirability of sanctioning some suitable uniform for the Civil Service of India, is said to have remarked, with that well-known merry twinkle of his eye, that he thought "the clothes they had would last his time." The late Viceroy was strongly in favour of the adoption of a uniform.

ECCLESIASTICAL.—We announced last week that the archdeaconry had been offered to the Rev. J. Baly, and we do not think that anybody will be disposed to quarrel with the Bishop's selection. As chaplain at Simla and at Allahabad, Mr. Baly won many friends. It is, as far as we know, the first time that the appointment has fallen to a chaplain who has been always stationed in the mofussil. Mr. Baly declined the chaplaincy of Fort William which was offered to him when Mr. Mayne retired in 1866.—Indian Church Gazette, March 16.

MR. DAVIES.—The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab held a full-dress durbar at Umritsur on the 21st March, to commemorate the recovery of the Prince of Wales, and in the evening gave a garden fete in the Rambagh gardens to the European and Native gentlemen of Lahore and Umritsur.

MONUMENT TO JUSTICE NORMAN.—We have been privileged to inspect a design for a monument to the memory of the late Chief Justice Norman, to be erected in the cathedral. The design is the work of Mr. Forsyth, the celebrated sculptor. We observe that the monument is Gothic in character, and the sentiment of the sculpture is in harmony with the office of the deceased judge. A medallion of Mr. Norman appears on the front of the pedestal, as also an elaborate figure of Justice. The points of the triangular arch above are occupied by figures of Faith, Hope, and Charity. The design commends itself to our judgment as eminently chaste and appropriate.—Indian Daily News.

PATIALA.—On the opening of the telegraph office at Patiala on the 13th March, the Maharajah sent the following message to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab:—"Under instructions from the Director General of Telegraphs in India, the Patiala Telegraph office is opened to day. I address this the first telegraphic message ever sent from Patiala to your Honour. May the telegraphic wire be one more strand in that cord of devotion and loyalty which binds all our hearts to the throne of her Majesty." His Honour replied from Umritsur on the 15th March as follows:—"His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor acknowledges with sincere pleasure the eloquent expression of your Highness's loyalty and devotion to her Majesty the Queen on the occasion of the opening of the telegraph line to Patiala."

THE MOHURRUM AT MORADABAD.—The Mohurrum did not pass off so quietly at Moradabad as at Bareilly. The Pioneer states that after nearly all the tazias had been passed out of the city without disorder by 2 P.M., some of the very lowest of the Mahomedan population, accompanying the last batch of tazias, still waiting at the Kotwali for their turn to defile out, began a disturbance, chiefly, it is thought, with a view to plunder. They set fire to some choppers, and wounded, more or less seriously, about a dozen of the Hindus, of whom one has died and another is considered to be dying. The authorities acted with vigour, and order was promptly restored. Some European troops were in the first instance sent down to the Kotwali, but have since been replaced by Sikhs. A number of ruffians concerned in the disturbance have been arrested, and we hope will be punished with the extremest severity of the law.

DISLOYAL PLACARDS IN CALCUTTA.—A little excitement was caused on Tuesday morning by the discovery of some placards affixed in various places in Calcutta offering rewards for the killing of the new Viceroy and several other officials who are supposed to have offended Mahomedans. The Examiner says:—"There was another scurrilous paragraph of an obscene nature, and it was a scoundrel-like composition altogether, but it evidently emanated from a source which is not likely to be concealed; in fact, we hear the police are in possession of a clue which promises to lead to the detection of the party or parties concerned. We only hope that discovery will soon prove who they are, and they will richly deserve the flogging they will get when caught. If the Mahomedans mean what they have so loudly talked about during the past few weeks, they will spare no pains to assist the police in tracing the offenders—not that we accuse any Mahomedans with having anything to do with it."

CALCUTTA COMMERCE.—The Calcutta Commercial Guide for the month of February last shows that, as compared with February last year, there was an increase in the value of merchandise imported of Rs. 45,98,069, and of bullion and specie imported of Rs. 1,04,16,044. Nearly every item in the list of imports shows an increase, the principal ones being under the heads of cotton piece-goods, woollens, copper, block tin, wrought metals, beer, wines, and brandy. Merchandise exported shows an increased value of Rs. 70,87,339, and bullion exported an increase of Rs. 4,20,931. The items which show the largest increase are cotton twist and piece-goods, silk piece goods, country woollens, tea, rice, opium, cotton, jute, gunnies, and hides, whilst indigo, sugar, raw silk, and all sorts of seeds show a decrease. There was an increase in the amount of duty collected on the goods imported and exported of Rs. 2,60,597, but a decrease in the salt duty of Rs. 6,99,604, or a net decrease of nearly Rs. 4,35,000.

QUARANTINE AT INDIAN PORTS.—The Bombay and Madras press are commenting severely upon the disregard of the public health shown by the commanders of the Daphne and the Crocodile. The former of these, it is remarked, left Calcutta with cholera on board, and just off Madras lost its commander. Before he died Captain Adams expressed a wish to be buried on shore, so the Daphne was brought into the roads, and while at anchor in the midst of the shipping a message was sent ashore for leave to land the corpse. After some delay the permission was given, and Captain Adams was buried in St. Mary's Cemetery. Meanwhile, however, the Daphne was in port, and by the simple act of escorting the body ashore a very serious danger was courted. The case of the Crocodile is, however, considered more unsatisfactory, for with the yellow flag flying she was allowed to come into Bombay harbour and land troops, part of whom were suffering from an epidemic sickness! This should never have been possible. Strict quarantine at the Indian ports is of the first necessity.—Pioneer.

ANUNDPORE.—Government have received information that the great annual gathering of Sikhs at Anundpore, about the 28th of March, would this year be unusually large. Precautions were being taken to keep the peace.

A CONTRADICTION.—The statement made in a North-West Provinces contemporary, that the Adjutant of the 70th Regiment died of fever, on the 12th March, on his way to Murrée, appears to be quite unfounded.—Times of India.

HOME FROM LOSHAI LAND.—The following is the latest news from the right (or General Brownlow's) column:—The Undaunted, with the Guide in tow, arrived off the coolie depot at Garden Reach on Sunday afternoon, bringing about 360 coolies under the command of Major C. A. Brown, commanding the coolie corps. Captain Mainwaring was also a passenger. The whole of the 4th Gurkhas should arrive in Calcutta on the 21st, at latest, in the s.s. Himalaya, and they will at once be sent up-country. The 2nd Gurkhas will leave Chittagong for Calcutta by steamer on the 23rd instant, and will also be sent off immediately on arrival. The Scotia will bring the 27th Regiment Punjab Native Infantry, and the Undaunted returns at once for more coolies. The destination of the 27th P.N.I. has been somewhat altered, as instead of the corps being divided between Barrackpur and Dacca, the whole of the regiment will go to the former station, whilst a wing of the 16th Bengal Native Infantry will go to Dacca. Considering how the 27th must have been separated during the expedition, we think it a very good move sending the whole of the regiment to one station. The general and staff, with one hundred of the 4th Gurkhas with two officers, one hundred of the 27th with two officers, and one gun of the Peshawar Mountain Battery with two officers, have gone off from Demagiri towards the Southern Howlongs, in order to recover some captives they are supposed to have still in their possession, and he will no doubt get them when they see how determined he is. The returned coolies show signs of having had some hard work during the campaign, but are withal very cheerful—we fancy very glad at the prospect of getting home. They only remain in Calcutta long enough to have their accounts made up, when they receive their pay and get railway passes to their homes. The longest stay yet made by any coolies after their landing has been three days, but they are generally sent off on the second. Of course, the sooner they are sent off, the greater is the saving to Government, and the authorities do right in not keeping the men doing nothing down here. There seemed to be very few very sick men landed yesterday, and we hope the next batches will be as healthy. Major Mackenzie has gone out with the General, and as Captain Case has just left Kassalong, it would seem that the Commissariat officers are the last to leave the country, and as they were amongst the first to go, they must have had enough of it.—Englishman, March 19.

STATION TALK.

CHUDDERGHAT, March 9.—I hear that the Nizam's Government have given permission to a Mr. A. Powell, of Melbourne, to establish a stud farm for the breed of horses, at a place called Alloor, situated about forty miles from Hyderabad. He has obtained a considerable piece of land measuring about 600 acres, on a lease of twenty years, during the first four of which he is to pay a nominal rent of one anna a beegah (about three quarters of an acre), and the remaining sixteen, a yearly rental of four annas per beegah. The Government reserve to themselves the right of selecting as many colts or fillies as may be required either for their own private use or as remounts for the cavalry and artillery regiments at a fixed rate of Rs. 350 each. Mr. Powell binds himself, amongst other conditions, not to sell the gram which he is allowed to grow in his Rumnah for the feed of his horses, in common with the ordinary ryots. Should he be found disposing of any portion of the produce, he will be rendered liable to the usual kist which the ryots pay the Sircar. The Nizam's Government agree to advance the sum of 20,000 H. S. rupees, equal to about 17,000 Government rupees, for the purpose of building a wall round the Rumnah; and last, not least, the contract will be annulled by the Government, should circumstances arise to necessitate such a measure, protecting Mr. Powell at the same time from any loss which the annulling the contract may occasion. Mr. Powell has left for Melbourne, for the purpose of selecting a batch of horses with the view of carrying out the enterprise. Though Mr. Powell is deserving of every encouragement, I fear that in a foreign state like Hyderabad the undertaking is not likely to meet with much success, owing to the many difficulties he will have to contend against. I am sorry to say that Mr. Stewart, the manager who is in charge of Mr. Powell's business, was, owing to some ill-feeling against him, attacked by a large number of natives somewhere on the Goolburga-road. Fortunately he had a revolver with him, which he used freely by shooting one dead, and wounding two others. This, however, did not discourage the scoundrels, who eventually struck him down and otherwise maltreated him most cruelly. Mr. Stewart was subsequently rescued and taken to Secunderabad. I am informed that Colonel Hackett having made a strong representation to the Resident setting forth his loss, and the ill treatment he received, the Government have been induced to offer a reward of Rs. 2,000 for the apprehension of the robbers. Eight of them have already been caught and caged, but the remaining four are still at large. I fear I have been rather premature in giving you such glowing accounts of the "coal discovery." Recent accounts received from the coal fields are rather discouraging; however, I hope to make further enquiry and acquaint you with the result. Sub-Assistant Surgeon Bayley, of the Madras Medical Establishment, who has been stationed here for some years, has, from failing health, applied for his pension. He has done excellent service, but unfortunately he belongs to the worst paid department of the State, and a paternal Government for long and meritorious services bestows the magnificent pension of Rs. 150 a-month, minus income-tax!—Athenæum Correspondent.

FINANCIAL.—Mr. R. Taylor succeeds Mr. Lodwick as accountant-general, Madras.

MYSORE.—The services of Colonel Boddam have been lent to the Mysore Government for another year. That officer is engaged in measures for the improvement of the cattle of the province.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE CAPITAL.—Madras is determined to make her new waterworks ornamental as well as useful. In the place of stand-posts, we are told, 130 fountains are to be erected in different parts of the city.

DEATH OF LIEUT. R. N. GORDON, 11TH FOOT.—The Jubbulpore paper mentions the death of Lieutenant R. N. Gordon, of the 1-11th Regiment, at Morar, of brain fever, caught whilst out in camp. There is a great deal of fever in the 70th Regiment at present. The Adjutant has succumbed to the disease, and some other officers of the corps are laid up.

MASONIC SERVICE.—A large body of the Masonic fraternity of Madras assembled on the evening of the 14th March, by direction of the Right Worshipful the District Grand Master, in the premises at Vepery, to hold a funeral service in memory of Right Worshipful Brother the Earl of Mayo, K.P., G.M.S.I., Viceroy and Governor-General of India, and Lord Patron of Masonry in India, and Honorary Member of the District Grand Lodge of Madras.

MR. MAYNE AND THE MADRAS GOVERNMENT.—Mr. J. D. Mayne was to renew his motion on the original side of the Madras High Court on Wednesday last, for a writ of mandamus to issue against the Madras Government, calling upon them to show cause why a writ should not issue calling them to summon him as a member of the Legislative Council to its meetings. The requirements of the Courts, as signified when Mr. Mayne made his former application, are understood to have been complied with.—Times of India, March 25.

COOLIE EMIGRATION.—Emigration is, and ought to be, popular among the coolies of Madras. The wages they receive for instance in St. Vincent is tenpence per diem, or Rs. 12-8 per mensem. In addition to this they have "provision grounds," with one day in the week allowed for tending them, and from these gardens they raise easily more than is required for the support of themselves and families. Any coolie in St. Vincent can, therefore, save in five years' time Rs. 800—more than sufficient to keep him in comfortable idleness in Madras for more than ten years!—Pioneer.

UNSETTLED STATE OF HYDERABAD.—It appears that highway robberies in the Nizam's territory are so numerous and daring, and are detected with so much difficulty, that special measures have been adopted to put them down. In the case of Europeans travelling, an escort is provided for their protection, and with a view to ensure their safety. Our readers may perhaps like to know what the police are about in such an emergency. This body has hitherto been found thoroughly inadequate to the task of suppressing these outrages. The fact is these Hyderabad ruffians are of such an abandoned and determined character that rougher handling is required by them than it is within the province of the police to give them.—Athenæum.

ADVANCE FOR THE PURCHASE OF SEED GRAIN TO RYOTS IN THE BERHAMPORE TALUQ.—In consequence of the failure of crops and the consequent reduced state of the ryots, it was decided by Mr. Thornhill, after consultation with those best able to judge, that such of the ryots of the Berhampore Taluq as have had no means of securing seed-grain should be assisted with advances to enable them to purchase it at once, as it is highly probable that the prices of seed grain will rise very high before the time of the next cultivating season. The sum required to meet this advance was roughly calculated at Rs. 15,000, which will, of course, be recovered with the kists of the ensuing Fasli 1282. The Acting Collector of Ganjam requested the Board of Revenue to obtain the sanction of Government for a grant of Rs. 15,000 on this account. The necessary sanction was obtained.—Madras Times.

CATTLE-LIFTING IN TRICHINOPOLY DISTRICT.—According to the proceedings of the district of Trichinopoly, "cattle-lifting is one of the chief and most prevalent crimes in that district, and a very large number of people, it is notorious, practice it as a trade." The magistrate then records that a sub-magistrate in that district lately sentenced a poor woman to pay a fine of Rs. 20, or in default to 20 days' rigorous imprisonment, because she was found to have one measure of illicitly manufactured earth-salt in her possession, and being unable to pay the fine, she underwent the imprisonment; while another sub-magistrate convicted "a well-known offender," in the questionable trade of cattle-lifting, of having in his possession a number of stolen cattle, and simply gave him one month's comfortable lodging and boarding in the house that Jack built. The district magistrate naturally indignant, has cautioned his sub-magistrates against such blunders, adding that it is manifest that nothing can be effected in the way of putting down the crime of cattle-lifting if magistrates pass such inadequate sentences in a district noted for the "kallars," or thieves.—Madras Times.

LOCOMOTIVES FOR THE MADRAS RAILWAY.—The Government of India have been requested to sanction a requisition on England by the Madras Railway authorities for twenty locomotive engines, the approximate estimated cost of which is said to be seven lakhs of rupees. With reference to the necessity for so large an increase, it is said that although there are at present 126 locomotives, twenty of them are tank engines, which are only used for shunting and special purposes, the remaining 106 having to work over an open line of over 832 miles. There are thirteen engine stations, five of which are termini, and two junctions; at each of these one spare engine is kept beyond the number actually employed in working ordinary trains—and allowing for a shed-day for each engine every seventh day and for extra traffic, &c., the number is said to be very inadequate. Under these circumstances, the Consulting Engineer has strongly recommended the application for sanction.—Madras Athenæum.

THE MAHARAJAH TOURING THROUGH TRAVANCORE.—The idea of a Native Prince making an official tour through his dominions is no more novel than welcome, and we are delighted to announce that the Maharajah of Travancore is said to be about to set his brother princes an example in this respect which the latter would do well to follow. We learn that orders have been issued at the instance of his Highness the Maharajah throughout Travancore to the effect that his Highness contemplates making an early tour through the central and northern parts of Travancore, and that the authorities and people in the towns through which his Highness intends to pass should be in readiness to receive the Royal party with befitting decorum and respect. His Highness will pass Quilon, Alleppey, Sertallah, Vycome, and will thence repair to Cottayam and the Peermade, doubtless calling at a great many other important townships in the course of the Royal progress.—Western Star.

THE NEILGHERRY BRANCH RAILWAY.—The Madras Railway authorities have submitted to Government the revised estimate for the construction of the Neilgherry Branch Railway, amounting to Rs. 18,55,802 less than the amount previously sanctioned. The chief cause of the reduction is explained as follows:—The line, as originally laid down, crossed the Bowany River three-quarters of a mile north of the town of Metapollim, and terminated at Kullar station, which is two miles and a-half beyond the Bowany River, the total length of the branch being 28 miles 43 chains. But the Government of India objected to this, and decided that the line should stop at the south bank of the Bowany River, on account of the expensive nature of the works between that and Kullar. Owing to this, it was found necessary to divert the line at twenty-three miles, and bring it much nearer the town of Metapollim than originally intended. The new route has the advantage of being fourteen miles shorter, but the chief objection to it by the railway authorities is that the crossing of the Bowany will not be so favourable should it be found desirable hereafter to continue the line across the river.—Madras Athenæum.

FROM BUSSORAH TO BAGHDAD.—II.

As the steamer advances up the river the banks become higher, and few objects of interest, beyond the native boats, or an occasional Turkish steamer, of which there are half a dozen on the river, are seen. About twenty miles in a direct line from Baghdad the magnificent arch of the Palace or Temple of the Sun at Ctesiphon, the old Parthian capital, is seen. Ruined walls of sun-dried bricks have been crumbling down for centuries here, and yet appear still for miles. They are twenty feet high in places and eight or ten yards broad. The arch, which is in the centre of a lofty facade 283 feet long, is of burnt brick, and is 101 feet high from the ruins which cover the ground. The width of the arch is 82 feet, and the thickness of the supporting walls is 19 feet. The depth of the hall westward (its front being due east) is 52 feet. These are the dimensions "our captain" gave me from the measurements of Mr. Rich in 1812, and they very nearly agree with the rough measurements I made in passing. For as the river makes a circuit here of several miles round a narrow peninsula little more than a mile and a half in width, we were kindly put on shore in the early morning (hardly five o'clock A.M.) with a guide to walk across amid the ruins, while the boat traced its winding course around. The morning was frosty, and salt-petre, together with hoar frost in many places covered and whitened the ground, while the stones at the edge of the river were slippery with ice. Not an inviting morning to turn out of a warm bed for a stroll.

The "pale cold moon," however, was shining brightly, and the magnificently grand and solitary ruins could be distinctly seen at the distance of one or two miles on the treeless plains. We ascended the ruined moundlike walls shortly after landing, and walked along them for several hundred yards. There were five in the party, two of whom had guns, but nothing of animal life by sight, sound, or motion was discoverable, only the panting of the now distant steam engine and the beating of the paddles, could be heard breaking what can only be called awful silence. We walked briskly to gather warmth, and on reaching the arch, which stands in solitary grandeur on the mound-covered plain, we paced its length and breadth, gazing upon it in wonder, when suddenly, as we were trying the echoes with our voices, a noise was heard as of a large bird flapping its wings. It may have been an owl; and one of the party standing near the west doorway fired a gun towards the east into the building, when an immense flock of blue pigeons issued forth in alarm. At a little less than a quarter of a mile distant a tomb with two or three date palms rising above a mosque-like dome surrounded with brick walls 12 or 13 feet high, was then visited, and thence a perfect cloud of birds large and small issued from the trees, the wonder being how so many could roost there. Several shots were wantonly fired at the flock, when the larger birds proved to be kites, and the smaller starlings, or very like them. It now began to dawn, and shortly after the sun rose, gilding the front of the splendid ruin long before it brightened the ground. In visiting another tomb, said to be that of a rajah or shah, at a short distance north of the great arch, we discovered some Arabs with a flock of sheep and goats, near some mat-covered tents or huts. They took little or no notice of us, and we strolled westward to the river. Across this, and directly opposite Ctesiphon, we had an excellent view of the ruined walls of sun-dried brick and the mounds of debris which are all that remain here at least of the once famous city of Seleucia, raised or founded by Seleucus Nicator. Both Ctesiphon and Seleucia are said to have been built from the ruins of Babylon, and were flourishing cities and episcopal sees long after Babylon lay in ruins. Both have in turn supplied materials for the city of Baghdad, which, amid all its vicissitudes, still retains much of the Oriental splendour for which during more than ten centuries it has been famous. As we stood by the river bank the sound of the steamboat paddles could be heard more than a mile distant, and gazing on this modern wonder as it approached in the distance, and on the old historic river, one was instinctively led to reflect on the various scenes of change and decay, of peace and war, that had been witnessed on the river and its banks, while the mighty and resistless current, like the stream of time, flows and had flowed on unchanged. We re-embarked, after having been full three and a half hours on shore, and very soon devoured rather than ate our breakfast. The captain, I fancy, saved but little for putting us on shore to walk, though he only laughed at our almost insatiable appetites, sharpened by the cold bracing air, and asked what we should do if obliged to be up like himself half the night in a similar temperature, without being able to run or walk to gather warmth. A few hours' steaming brought us to the palm groves and gardens with half hidden houses on both sides of the river below the city of Baghdad. The view of the city on approaching it from the river below is a magnificent one. Lofty walls, houses, and towers, partly hidden by palms and orange trees, rise on either side, and above them numerous cupolas, domes, and minarets. Towards the north on the left bank is a fine brick building erst the college of Caliphate days, now used as a Custom House. Opposite this the first bridge of boats crosses to the west side of the city. Above the Custom House, on the same side, is the citadel and barracks, "the Horse Guards" of Baghdad, in the great yard of which, and close to the river, stands a clock tower about ninety feet high, recently completed. The tower, though a very conspicuous object, has the face of the clock so small that one can scarcely see the time one hundred yards distant; and though there was a white circle apparently on purpose for the figures, these are placed outside the circle, and are scarcely larger than those on the face of an ordinary mantelpiece clock. The clock is by Bennett, the well-known maker of Cheapside, and has four faces. Above the barracks is the residence of the Pasha, and above this on the same side is a neat summer palace, splendidly furnished with the richest furniture, carpets, tapestry, hanging lamps, and chandeliers, mostly from Europe. This palace was erected only a little more than a year ago for the Shah of Persia, who stayed there on his visit. The garden, which is walled in, contains numerous orange, palm, vine, and fig trees, a band stand, and parterres of flowers. Opposite the barracks, across the river, is a new General Hospital, recently erected, and is a splendid building, and though not large, it will perhaps contain eighty or a hundred patients. There is a second bridge of boats across the river above the Shah's palace; and near the western end of this bridge is a tramway (formerly worked by steam and now by horses), which extends nearly five miles to a suburb called Kathemaine or Kauzemain, a popular sacred shrine with the Shia sect of Moslems. Here there is a very splendid mosque with two large gilded domes, and four lofty and elegant minarets, the latter covered with enamelled blue tiling, which glitters in the sun for many miles distance. There are about forty-five mosques and twenty-one or more smaller musjids in Baghdad; and many of the minarets and domes of the former are also covered with similar tiles. The bazaars, which are covered, are by far the finest and most busy I have yet seen in the East, though the streets are extremely irregular, narrow, and dirty, being, except in one or two places near the barracks, entirely unpaved, and the water, of which there has been here also a heavy downfall lately, runs along the middle of the streets, which for architecture are for the most part execrable. Yet the appearance of the city, from several of the heights, as the clock tower, the Juma Suk-alghazil, an old minar about 100 feet high, as well as from the top of the dome of the splendid new French Church St. Joseph, is an imposing one. Far across the plain some ten or twelve miles to the N.W. rises conspicuously a dark lofty mound of brick work ruin, called Aka Kuf, supposed to be the remains of some tower of the Median wall, or of one of the many canals and water works which in bygone times of Assyrian grandeur existed here. On the west side of the city also and bordering on the desert, is a once splendid tomb, now little more than a ruin, said to be the resting place of Zobeide, noted in the Alf-i-Leilat-w-Leilat. The Jews have always been strong here, and probably because not a few remained after the captivity, or voluntarily returned hither in later times of trouble. Benjamin of Tudelah, who visited this place in the twelfth century, says there were then more than two thousand, and though their numbers have since decreased in some places of the East, they appear to have increased here, and are now not less than 15,000. They have many synagogues and schools, some of which I have to day visited, and found them thronged. There are also Syrian, Chaldee, Armenian, and Roman Catholic Christians, all of whom have churches here and some of considerable size. The Roman Catholic Bishop, however, bears the title still of Bishop of Babylon. A census of the population of Baghdad, Kazimein, and Athum, another suburb, was taken in 1869, and published in the Zora of Tuesday, 23rd Jumadi-ul-Awol 1286, A.H., agreeing to thirty-one days A.D. 1869, which gives the following particulars:—

Jews	9,325
Native Christians	1,258
Persian subjects	2,126
British subjects	265
Russian subjects	14
French subjects	3
Austrian subjects	3
Total	65,683

This comprises males only, from six months old and upwards. The total population is at 150,000, including a large number of strangers and foreigners, as visitors and pilgrims to the mosques and shrines. But, of course, the census taken thus can be little else than a rough approximation. The city has, however, many times risen and fallen. Tamarlane is said to have destroyed or massacred in A.D. 1400 some 90,000 people, and piled their heads in pyramids at the gates, while previous to this Kalaku is said to have slain 300,000 persons who defended the city against his invasion in A.D. 1257. Plagues too have at times thinned its inhabitants, yet it seems to have speedily again filled up the ranks of the fallen. And though during the past year or two want, starvation, and famine have been severely felt around, there is an air of busy activity and an appearance of greater prosperity than can be found in any other city of the East, except perhaps in the great seaports of India, China, and Japan.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

MILITARY.—It has been reported at Mhow that, in the event of Colonel Schneider getting a Brigade, Colonel Maude, Deputy Judge Advocate at Poona, will succeed him, and in that case Colonel Williams will have to go from Mhow to Poona, and Major Mallaby to come up to Mhow.

THE SIND FRONTIER.—Since the occupation of Charbar by the Persians, great distress prevails amongst the traders, who are obliged to borrow food from each other. Their property is still detained by Hoosein Khan. A servant in the employ of the telegraph department was fired at by Hoosein Khan's men while he was proceeding to obtain provisions from a boat that had recently arrived. One shot grazed the servant's arm. The Sarawan Sirdars have all arrived at Jacobabad, and the hearing of what they wish to bring forward has commenced. The Jalawan Sirdars have also been invited to the meeting.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, March 25.—Prices show little change on our previous quotations, the clearances have been of the most limited character, and in a number of descriptions no sales of any kind have been effected. In Yarns there has been almost nothing doing, but the limited stocks prevent any serious decline in prices. Metals are steady, at about former values.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, March 25.—Cotton: To-day's rates for New Dholerah, May delivery, are almost the same as quoted a week ago. The purchases during the week have not been heavy, the total being only about 15,000 bales. Wool: The decline in England has induced a similar movement here, and our quotations are reduced from Rs. 5 per candy on the superior qualities to Rs. 20 per candy on the lower sorts.

MONEY MARKET.—BOMBAY, March 25.—EXCHANGE: The market during the week has been entirely devoid of any new feature of interest, and, although rates opened with a somewhat firmer tendency, our quotations at the close are the same as for last mail. In Calcutta exchange we quote demand drafts nominally at 1/4 to 5/16 per cent. premium, and 60 days' sight at 1/4 to 1 per cent. discount. The rates on China for 60 days' sight drafts are quoted at Rs. 220 per 100 dollars.

NURSERY RHYMES FOR THE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

There was a Nabob,
 Lived in S.W.,
 He had so many officers
 He didn't know what to do.
 They asked to leave his service,
 But he only shook his head,
 Until he called his Actuary,
 Then he wished them all—dead.
 Staff Corp is so cheap;
 For, though you've a heap
 Of men, and no work to find them,
 Leave them alone, says Actuary Stone,
 Some may die, so we won't mind them.
 Lord Tom Noodle made a mess
 Of his Indian incōmē;
 He paid his men for idleness,
 And called it economy.

THE REPRESENTATION OF INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

At the instance of the East India Association conferences have recently been held in the theatre of the Society of Arts, for the purpose of discussing the claims of India to direct representation in the British House of Commons, and among the distinguished Anglo-Indians and others who have assisted in the debates have been Sir Donald Macleod, C.B., K.C.S.I., late Governor of the Punjab, Sir Harry Verney, Mr. C. B. Eastwick, M.P., Mr. R. S. Macfie, M.P., Mr. Dickinson, M.P., Major Evans Bell, Sir Vincent Eyre, C.B., K.C.S.I., Mr. William Tayler, Dewan Kazi Shahabudin, Syed Mahmood, Mr. Elliott, and others.

Mr. I. T. PRICHARD, who opened the question in a very able address, urged that, admitting it was for the best interests of both India and England that the union between the two countries should be lasting, the best means of securing that end was by according to the former actual incorporation into the British Empire. In theory this was already the case, but not so in practice, while deprived of representation in Parliament. He showed at length that the grounds on which this claim rested were justice and expediency, and he further instanced that the Crown and Parliament had power to grant such concessions. Anticipating objections, he contended that the size of India was no bar; that fitting representatives could be found; that the system was familiarised to the natives by tradition and custom; that the mechanical difficulties of registering the suffrages were chimerical. In conclusion, he urged that the union between England and India could be secured only by the extension of the representative principle, so far, at least, as to admit members for India to sit in the House of Commons for the great centres of industry and trade; that the Constitutional principle that there should be no taxation without representation was contravened in regard to India; that deplorable blunders were constantly being made in the House of Commons respecting India—blunders which would be remedied were men acquainted with the wants and feelings of the natives permitted to occupy seats in the Legislature.

The speakers who followed Mr. Prichard, while generally agreeing that the representative principle might be successfully applied in India, were nearly unanimous in the opinion that a separate Legislature should be established in India as preferable to admitting Indian representatives to the British House of Commons, where they could at best exercise little weight.

In concluding the conference, the Chairman (Mr. John Dickenson, Chairman of the Indian Reform Society) said he regarded England's attitude to India as one that should be entirely educational, and that a time should come when the latter, having gained solidity, enlightenment, and prosperity should be restored to independence, and only be associated with the British Empire, like the Colonies, by the bonds of self-interest and of gratitude.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The committee resumed its sittings after Easter on Tuesday, the 9th inst., the Right Hon. A. S. Ayrton in the chair. The attendance of members was numerous, and included the following well-known M.P.s, viz.: Mr. Grant Duff, Mr. Fawcett, Sir Stafford Northcote, Mr. Crawford, Mr. Herman, Mr. Eastwick, Mr. Burke, Mr. J. B. Smith, and others. The greater part of the day was devoted to a continuation of the inquiry into the Indian railway guarantee system; Mr. W. T. Thornton and Mr. Juland Danvers being again the witnesses with whom the investigation was conducted. The present explanations given by the witnesses applied to statements made at previous meetings, regarding the different railways.

After going into the affairs and the accounts, with the Government of the East Indian Railway Company, the committee investigated the affairs of the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway Company, it appearing that the latter line has proved the most expensive and the worst paying of all the lines. This railway had been constructed under the superintendence of Colonel Kennedy, and under the auspices of Lord Dalhousie. The first sod was laid in March, 1856. It had been undertaken upon the strongest assurance that it could be cheaply and economically constructed, in comparison with contemporaneous lines; but the result of making the line was that, as above stated, it had proved the most costly of all the Indian railways, and remained still in a very incomplete state. Even requisite and proper stations were not yet made, there being in lieu of substantial stations only rough temporary sheds. The company which had undertaken the railway, and the Government which had associated itself with the Bombay and Baroda Company in constructing the line, had been for sixteen years making it together, yet had not even now arrived at a determination where to plant a proper substantial railway-station.

In reply to questions put by the chairman and other members of the committee regarding the slow progress of the works, Mr. Danvers answered that the defective supervision that had been complained of did not arise from carelessness, he believed, but from uncontrollable circumstances. The company had always been desirous of seeing the line completed, but had not the funds to enable them to do what was requisite. They waited therefore for the aid of Government, and this had not been forthcoming without great delays occurring in carrying on the works in former days. These delays had involved losses, as stated, to the amount of three millions sterling; nevertheless, the witness believed that the Government and the company had each given conscientious consideration to questions arising, with the view of improving the property. Mr. Danvers testified to the sufficiency and suitability of the Imperial Government's Railway committee which sat over the destinies of Indian railways. This committee possessed both that knowledge of the country and the experience which could guide the members of the Indian Council in judging and deciding upon the requirements of Indian railways; probably they were as capable of giving advice and attending to the wants of the different lines as might be any ordinary board of railway directors. The witness named several members of this committee, and mentioned that the chairman was an ex-Lieut.-Governor of Bengal. The witness said he could only acknowledge, with reservations, that, as suggested by the right hon. the chairman of the Indian Finance Committee, and Mr. Fawcett and others, the people of India had suffered through the enormous losses incurred by the Indian Government through associating itself with the railways.

Mr. Fawcett then turned the course of examination from the above topics by reverting to Mr. Thornton's declaration put on record at the last meeting, that he held opinions diametrically opposed to his brother witness's (Mr. Danvers) ideas with regard to the policy of the past system of guaranteeing Indian railways, &c. Mr. Thornton underwent a lengthy examination, engaged in by nearly every member of the committee, one after the other, to test the value of his opinions as opposed to the guarantee system. The effect of Mr. Thornton's replies was that the guarantee system had proved itself to be a pernicious one; that the Government might have more beneficially and more profitably constructed their own railways instead of aiding and protecting public companies to make them with all the latter's inexperience and ignorance of the country, recklessness, extravagance, &c. Mr. Thornton thought it most unaccountably impolitic that the Government of India should ever have agreed to guarantee upon the gratuitously liberal terms they had granted—viz., of giving five per cent. for managing the railway companies' money and railway works, and undertaking to return the plant of every line, guaranteed free of all demands upon it, at the expiration of ninety-nine years. This was a most ridiculous and foolish bargain; and it had turned out to be fraught with the greatest injury to the public exchequer. Such a guarantee had led to all sorts of evils, and also to unfair contracts and agreements whereby the Government sought to protect themselves after discovering that they had put themselves too much in the hands of the railway companies. Mr. Thornton cited the opinions of eminent Indian statesmen, which were similar to his own as opposed to the guarantee system.

The result of Mr. Thornton's trying examination was that his opinions on the impolicy of the guarantee system could not be shaken.

The Chairman restated the opinions that had been offered by several hon. members, who considered that the opposition offered to the guarantee system by the witness was based upon mere theory, and that those ideas would be found of problematical utility if put in practice; also several hon. members said they believed that the late East India Company and Board of Control adopted the most feasible course they could in originally treating with the directors of Indian railway companies, and that course was the principle of guaranteeing at five per cent. interest for capital a ninety-nine years' lease, and the return of the property at the expiration of the term of ninety-nine years. This was the mode of guaranteeing on railways in France, and the East India Company had adopted it as an equitable course. A variety of reasons were given in support of the financial principle adopted by the East India Company.

Mr. Thornton was reverting to other points of difference between Mr. Danvers's views and his own, when strangers were ordered to withdraw. The committee adjourned shortly afterwards.

On Friday, Mr. Elliott, coffee planter of Mysore, was examined on the state of agriculture in that province, the capabilities of the soil, the condition of public works, and the means of irrigation and cultivation of the soil. The information elicited was to the effect that the soil of Mysore is too poor to grow any sort of cereals except those it is accustomed to, such as the indigenous grains. Irrigation works are too costly for so poor a land to support; although Mysore, as a regulation province, must ultimately improve as a producing country with the introduction of European modes of agriculture. Mysore would derive great advantage from the assistance of the Forestry Department, who might extend its operations to the planting of trees and the production of fuel and artificial manure. The witness's political panacea for developing the resources of Mysore was to establish regular communication between the native people and the Government of India by means of those "Consultative Councils" which had been before recommended.

BRITISH-INDIAN EXTENSION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The directors of the British-Indian Extension Telegraph Company (Limited) have issued the following report, to be presented on the 17th of April:—"The directors have the pleasure to submit the annexed account, and balance-sheet up to the 31st of December last, which completes the first year of the company's operations. The gross revenue has amounted to £61,065. 11s. 6d., and the expenses to £12,827. 15s. 7d., showing a balance of £48,237. 15s. 11d., which, after the deduction of income-tax and interest on debentures, leaves a net profit of £45,418. 14s. 11d. Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, April 8.—LADY MAYO'S PENSION.—Lord R. GOWER was understood to inquire whether Government had come to any determination respecting the Countess of Mayo's pension. The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said the noble lord had put the question to him on Friday evening without notice, and therefore he was unable to answer him until the present evening. His answer now was that as the hon. member for Waterford had put down a motion for the discussion of Lady Mayo's pension, her Majesty's Government thought it more respectful to the House to reserve their opinion until the discussion took place—"Oh!" Mr. OSBORNE (following the suggestion of Mr. Gladstone) stated that he would bring forward the subject on Friday next, on the motion for going into Committee of Supply.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, April 9.—THE ROYAL HORSE ARTILLERY.—Sir CHARLES WINGFIELD asked the Under Secretary of State for India why officers of the Royal Horse Artillery had been refused compensation for the pecuniary loss sustained by them on account of horses, tents, and equipments which they are compelled by regulation to keep up, in consequence of their being ordered to England in March, 1871, at a few weeks' notice, on a reduction of the Indian establishment, compensation having been given to the officers of the 7th and 19th Hussars, ordered home in the previous year under circumstances which the late Governor-General pronounced to be substantially the same. Mr. GRANT DUFF said the case of the Hussars was different from that of the Artillery. The former had to leave at unusually short notice, and the Government determined, first, that in their very exceptional case the ordinary rules of the service might properly be set aside, and, secondly, that the indulgence accorded to them should not be allowed to form a precedent. Of the five batteries, none had less, some had more, than a fortnight to make their preparations, whereas the 7th Hussars had only about 48 hours.

THE CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA.—Sir CHARLES WINGFIELD asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether any rules had been submitted by the Government of India for the sanction of the Secretary of State for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of the Act 33 Vic., c. 3., relative to the increased employment of natives of India in the Civil Service of India. Mr. GRANT DUFF said that no such rules as those referred to by the hon. member had been received from the Government of India; and the Secretary of State was about to draw the attention of that Government to the subject.

INDIAN OFFICERS.—Mr. GRANT DUFF, in reply to several questions from Sir J. ELPHINSTONE relative to the grievances of Indian officers, said the address referred to by the hon. baronet asked for the further consideration of the subject of that address on the ground of certain orders of her Majesty not having been properly carried out. To that address her Majesty replied as follows:—"I have received your address praying that, as the orders I gave for the redress of the grievances of the officers of the Indian Army, consequent upon an address of the House of Commons, dated the 2nd of May, 1865, have not been carried out in the sense of the address, owing to deductions being made from the bona fide claims of officers on the ground of accelerated promotion, and on the ground of increased retiring pensions, further consideration may be given to the subject, with a view to the redress of the still unsatisfied claims. The grievances referred to in the address of the House of Commons, dated the 2nd of May, 1865, were restricted under the terms of that address to such grievances as had been admitted by the Commission on the memorials of Indian officers of 1863 to have arisen by a departure from the assurances given by Parliament by the Acts 21, and 22 Vic., c. 106, and 23 and 24 Vic., c. 100. I have every reason to believe that the grievances which were admitted by the Commission have been fully redressed. As regards the compensation for bonus payments which my Government undertook to sanction in 1866 I shall direct further examination to be made whether the conditions upon which it was intimated to Parliament that such compensation would be granted have been fully observed." In consequence of that reply a despatch was sent to the Government of India, which, with the reply from the Government of India, had been laid before Parliament. In reply to the hon. baronet's second question, he had to say that he did communicate to the House many months ago the replies of the Madras and Bombay Governments. In reply to the hon. baronet's third question, he had to say that he did not at all know what view Lord Napier of Magdala took of the opinions of the Governments of Madras and Bombay. Lord Napier of Magdala was a member of the Government of India, and he had not given the Imperial Government any reason to suppose that he dissented from the view of the Government to which he belonged.

THE SLAVE TRADE IN THE PERSIAN GULF.—Mr. EASTWICK asked the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies whether any vessels carrying slaves had been captured in the Persian Gulf since the 1st of January, 1864, as no such captures appear in the Return dated the 13th of June, 1870; and, if not, whether that was owing to the suppression of the trade in the Gulf.—Lord ENFIELD: Only three slave vessels have been captured by our cruisers in the Persian Gulf since 1864, and those captures were made by H.M.S. Maggie in the month of June last. The fact that so few captures have been made by our cruisers in the Persian Gulf is not, however, owing to the suppression of the traffic there, as a considerable number of slaves are annually landed on the shores of the Gulf, but rather to the circumstance that during the spring and autumn of the year, the periods when it is possible for the slave dhows to run their cargoes, the few cruisers disposable for the suppression of the slave trade are employed either in watching the African coast, whence the slavers start, or in cruising off the Island of Socotra, at a point where nearly all the slavers are compelled to pass on their way to the Red Sea or the Persian Gulf.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, April 11.—102ND FUSILIERS.—Mr. RIDLEY asked the Secretary of State for War if he could state the reason why, in the scheme which had been laid upon the table of the House, the 102nd and 103rd Regiments, being both Indian Fusilier Regiments, had been attached respectively to the 83rd and 97th Regiments, which were both Irish regiments, and whether he would consider the expediency of linking the 102nd and 103rd together on account of their similarity as regards history, age, and designation.—Sir H. STOKES said the reason of the two regiments having been so attached to the 83rd and 97th Regiments was, that it facilitated the arrangements for relief. As to the expediency of leaving the 102nd and 103rd Regiments together, that subject was now under consideration.

PETITIONS PRESENTED.—The following petitions from Indian officers have been presented during the past week:—By Colonel Stuart Knox, from Colonel Briggs, of the 14th Bombay N.I., and Colonel Webster, Bengal S.C., praying for redress of grievances on the principles admitted in Clause 4; by Mr. Eykyn, from Colonel C. S. Bivar, late Madras L.C., and Captain T. M. Rocke, late Madras S.C., praying for redress of grievances; by Mr. Dyke, from Colonel Williams and Major Vaughan, late Indian Army, for compensation for retiring bonus; by Mr. Beresford Hope, from Colonel Moyle, Major Tulloch, and Captain Blew, for redress of grievances as to their retirement from the Indian Army.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

THE INDIAN INCOME TAX.

The Times observes that the substantial objections to the income-tax as a source of revenue in India are two—the difficulties of assessment as regards the native contributors, and the peculiar hardship inflicted on our own countrymen. As regards assessment, the complaints, even in this country, of the inquisitorial, oppressive, and inequitable character of the tax are universal and unceasing, but in India these difficulties are aggravated beyond conception. Mr. Samuel Laing has told the readers of this journal that Hindoos will actually commit suicide rather than satisfy the demands of the returning officer, and on all hands it is admitted that the tax can only be levied at an unknown cost of injustice, intimidation and tyranny. Compared with the profits derived by the Exchequer, it may be said that this tax occasions the maximum of terror, trouble, and discontent, while the position of our own countrymen with regard to it is so exceptional that the circumstance cannot possibly be excluded from the account. The English in India, be it remembered, are a mere handful, and the English payers of income-tax are, as a body, represented by officers serving under Government. Let the reader realise to himself, if he can, what this implies. In the first place, the taxable income of these men is known to a shilling. It is constituted by their salaries, these salaries all the while being in the nature of annuities for short terms of years. Service in India is so exhausting that it is not and cannot be the work of a life. It is endurable only for a period, and during this period savings must be made and funds laid by for after years. Sometimes, in the higher departments of State, salaries are measured by a very short term of office. In all cases the time of work soon comes to an end. It follows that the tax, as regards Anglo-Indians, is a tax upon capital as well as upon income, while it is levied, nevertheless, to the uttermost farthing. English contributors are, so to speak, rack-rented all round. They cannot escape a sixpence of their dues. Rich natives can hardly be reached, though they can easily be terrified, but Europeans have no chance of mitigation or evasion. We need add little to explain or to justify the apprehensions with which the retention of this tax as a regular source of revenue is regarded by our countrymen in India. True, 1 per cent. is not a very heavy assessment, but the rate was raised only the other day to upwards of three times that amount, even in the absence, as the event proved, of any real necessity for the proceeding. Indian financiers have not of late shown themselves either so expert or so considerate as to command unreasoning assent to their proposals. We cannot trust their Estimates even as much as Mr. Lowe's, and an income-tax, it may be thought, is too dangerous an engine to be placed in their hands. At any rate, it will be argued, the necessity should be overpowering, and that is certainly not upon the face of the Budget the fact at present.

UNFAIR CHARGES ON THE INDIAN EXCHEQUER.

The Daily News remarks that the India Office witnesses before the Finance Committee frankly admitted that the Indian Exchequer was subjected to burthens and disabilities which did not exist under the old régime, and that our War Office, in dealing with this matter, naturally drove as hard a bargain as it could with the representatives of our Eastern Empire, not a difficult thing for it to do, since it holds a monopoly in its own hands. It is, of course, most desirable that the interests of English taxpayers should be adequately protected, but assuredly not at the expense of Bengalese peasants. Moreover, General Pears, in reply to Sir Charles Wingfield, expressed the opinion that the Indian Government was too largely burthened with officers in proportion to the number of men. What will the public think of the fact that 200 officers are being paid by that Government in England as part of the machinery for training and sending out 3,000 infantry soldiers? India rejoices in her honorary colonelcies, but, although the holders of them are non-resident, they represent an annual charge of £50,000 per annum. The only defence of this system which was attempted amounted to this: that, as honorary colonelcies have always formed part of the English military service, they must be maintained for the sake of uniformity; in other words, one abuse is necessary because a similar one already exists. Mr. Fawcett elicited the fact that about one-fourth of all the officers of the Indian army are either with their depots in England or on leave of absence—a state of things which one of the witnesses palliated on the ground that when the officers were absent from duty they received less pay, and therefore were a less charge upon the Exchequer; although the logical conclusion would appear to be, that if so many men can be spared from staff or regimental duty, the military establishment itself might be permanently reduced. The cross-examination of the official witnesses, which Mr. Fawcett conducted with much ability and skill, more than justifies a suspicion that under the existing system India is made liable for charges which she would not incur if she were free to go into an open market and procure all the men and supplies she wants; and we also think that this suspicion is applicable almost as much to the naval as to the military expenditure. It is equally certain that, so long as the Indian recruits are here, they are regarded as part of the effective strength of the British Army, and are so treated in Parliamentary and official documents. It is true that, if an emergency arose and they were employed for other purposes, India would not be charged for them; but the fact that the Secretary of State for War is able to dispose of their services as he pleases, is surely an additional reason why the greatest equity should be shown in apportioning the share of the burthen which the Indian people are called upon to bear. General Pears, in answer to Mr. Fawcett, stated that six months ago a letter was written to the War-office strongly remonstrating against the recruit charges, but “no answer” had been received. This is a long delay even for the British Circumlocution-office; but perhaps the publicity which is now given to the fact will impart a little activity to the sluggish department. Meanwhile, although we have abolished the East India Company, it is by no means certain that we have got rid of the double Government against which statesmen and orators formerly declaimed.

LOW SPIRITS, DESPONDENCY.—Sickness soon weighs down the most buoyant spirits, unless they be maintained by the hope of speedy recovery. This salutary hope may safely be based on Holloway's world-esteemed remedies, which are the safest and most efficient curatives of all diseases affecting the exterior or interior of the human body. They rouse every organ to its natural standard by purifying the blood, stimulating the nerves, and dislodging any obstructions in the vessels or glands. In skin diseases, and children's complaints Holloway's medicaments are invaluable. In all the maladies to which families are liable, these remedies are particularly useful in rectifying and strengthening those organs upon the dire performance of whose functions the health depends.

Throughout his long and searching tour in the Punjab no sign of dislike to the Government or distrust of its officers appears to have been discovered.

LORD HOBART, the new Governor, was expected to reach Madras about the end of this month. As soon as he arrives there, Mr. Ellis takes his departure homewards. Mr. Cunningham, whose appointment to act as Advocate-General at Calcutta had caused so fierce an outcry in Bengal, has, apparently by orders from England, been transferred to the permanent post of Advocate-General at Madras.

GOOD reports concerning indigo come from the districts of Champaran, Saran, and Maddia. A marked improvement has also taken place in the suffering districts of Puri.

A TELEGRAM of March 13 from General Brownlow, at a place called Sypoa, sums up the work done by the Right or Chittagong Column, as follows:—

The complete subjection of two powerful tribes inhabiting upwards of sixty villages, of which twenty that resisted, were attacked and destroyed; the personal submission of fifteen chiefs and their solemn engagement for future good behaviour; the surrender of Mary Winchester, and the release of upwards of 100 captives, not including the quota still due by the Sylhoos. In addition, its operations extending over a very large area, have enabled the officers of the survey to triangulate 3,000 square miles of country, of which more than half has been surveyed in detail, and to complete the connection between the districts of Cachar and Chittagong.

We are sorry to hear that General Bouchier is very ill with dysentery, brought on by the hardships of the late campaign.

LORD ULICK BROWNE is the new member of the Bengal Council, in which Mr. Graham has resigned his seat. Mr. Lyall is to officiate as Under-Secretary to the Indian Government. Sir W. Merewether is likely to retain his present post for another three years.

MR. JUSTICE CAMPBELL of the Punjab High Court has been placed on the Committee of Enquiry into the Convict System at the Andaman Islands. It is also said that Mr. W. L. Heeley, Director-General of Jails, will proceed to report on the prison discipline at Port Blair. Colonel Fraser, C.B., Secretary to the Government of the North-West Provinces in the Public Works Department, has gone to Bombay to help the Commissioner deputed to examine the harbour improvements and defences. Mr. J. A. Forbes has been made an additional member of the Bombay Council.

COLONEL O. J. McL. FARRINGTON has been appointed Commissioner of Rawal Pindi, Mr. Brandreth of Lahore, Major-General R. G. Taylor of Amritsar, Mr. T. D. Forsyth of Ambala, and Mr. R. S. Melvill of Jalandhar. General Sir H. Tombs has taken command of the Cawnpore—or, as the Englishman now spells it, Kanhpur—Division.

ACCORDING to a telegram of to-day's date from Bombay, the Flying Squadron has just arrived in harbour. It is also stated that the Messageries Maritimes steamer Neva struck upon a reef in the Banca Straits on Saturday, and it is considered doubtful if she will succeed in getting off.

IN addressing the Convocation of the Calcutta University, Mr. Clive Bayley paid a warm tribute to the interest taken by Lord Mayo in the higher class education of the country, and

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail, which came in some hours after time, are—from Bombay, April 1; Agra and Madras, March 30; Calcutta, March 29.

No news of any special importance has come to hand. At the meeting of the Legislative Council on March 26, the passing of the Oaths and Declarations Bill was postponed a week on account of an amendment proposed by Mr. G. Campbell. Two Bills were passed, one declaring the law in the Punjab, and another on the jurisdiction of the High Courts over Sindh. The Committee also presented their report on the Bill for the protection of patterns and designs. As the Bengal Council did not meet on March 27, Mr. Campbell's promised speech on the Budget has not come off; but the papers have been published, and the public curiosity allayed on the question of fresh taxation. There is to be no fresh taxation for Bengal, and eight lakhs of rupees, or £80,000 have been saved on last year's income. Much of this saving however appears to have been effected by starving public works. Although a road-cess Act has been passed, not a rupee will be collected under it before next autumn. The income for the present year, including the surplus and the 118 lakhs assigned from the imperial revenues, will amount to nearly a million and a half sterling.

IF outward semblances may count for anything, the Sikhs in the Punjab are not generally imbued with Kuka sympathies. On reaching their holy city of Amritsar Mr. Davis on the 22nd March held a grand durbar, attended by all the nobles of the district. He had also the pleasure of listening to an address signed by the leading Sikhs on behalf of the entire district, in which address the Lieutenant-Governor was earnestly assured by Sikhs of all classes in Amritsar, that they had no connection or sympathy whatever with the Kuka sect. Henceforth indeed the Sikhs and Kukas are to be "mortal enemies" owing to the stain that has been cast by the latter on the honour of the Punjab. Mr. Davies thanked the nobles and praised the people of Amritsar for showing how wide a gulf of feeling lay between their fellow-worshippers and the "miscreants" they disowned.

to his strenuous efforts on behalf of education among the Mohammedans. It was he himself, we are assured, who drew up the Resolution lately issued on that subject. Of the late Mr. Norman also, we are told by the same speaker that "his very last labours in life were given to promote the special cause of Mohammedan education." Another worthy lately dead, Archdeacon Pratt, is mentioned as one who, in "the spirit of the purest self-sacrifice, dedicated his talents and his life to the service of India, willingly foregoing in that service the prospect of a distinguished career at home."

IN accordance with the spirit of Lord Mayo's Resolution, the Calcutta University, we are glad to see from Mr. Bayley's address, has resolved to include Persian in the list of languages recognised as "classical." Another improvement adopted by the University aims at giving practical encouragement to the study of physical science among its pupils. Henceforth the candidates for a degree will be allowed to take up the physical sciences instead of certain subjects hitherto required of them. A certain amount of literary training is still, however, to be enforced—and very properly—on all alike.

IN his farewell order to the Cachar Column on its safe return from a very trying if comparatively bloodless campaign, General Bouchier bears admiring witness to the discipline, energy, and unflagging services of his troops. Hard work, he truly said, had been their lot, work done with a will "under the most trying circumstances of heat and frost." The only shelter alike for officers and men consisted of rude huts of grass or leaves. They had to march day by day over precipitous mountains, rising at one time to six thousand feet, and to make 103 miles of good road for elephants; but their spirits "never flagged, and when they met the enemy, they drove them from their stockades and strongholds, until they were glad to sue for mercy." After specifying the several services rendered by different parts of the Column, the General has a word for the younger officers, who are specially felicitated on having had "such an opportunity of gaining experience in mountain warfare." The services of all will no doubt be duly appreciated by the Commander-in-Chief, by whom we must remember that the plan of the campaign was originally devised, and who may therefore claim no little share in its successful issue. We for our part are inclined at present chiefly to congratulate the troops on having got through their work with so few miscarriages before the rainy season set in.

THE Times of India gives a table showing the progress likely to be made by the Indian Staff Corps during the next ten years in reaching their normal proportions. In 1881 the number of Brevet Colonels and Lieutenant Colonels, which last year stood at 106 and 208 respectively, will have risen, it seems, to 1,100 and 399, unless some special clearance should meanwhile be made among them. The 26 Major-Generals of last year will in like manner have become 43. After all allowances the Staff Corps in 1881 will contain at the lowest reckoning 850 Brevet Colonels, besides 150 who have remained local. This will entail a charge of £1,124,000 a-year on the Indian Exchequer, a prospect which ought to quicken the steps his Grace appears at length to have begun taking towards reducing the plethora of unemployed field officers.

THE Indian railway receipts for last year amounted to £5,955,071, or about £50,000 less than the year before. Seeing that more than four hundred miles of new railway were opened in 1871, the decrease can hardly be considered as trifling as it might seem at first. In 1869, when only 4,233 miles were open, or nearly 800 less than last year, the traffic receipts amounted to £5,709,388. At that rate the receipts for last year ought to have exceeded six and a-half millions. On the East Indian Line the receipts for 1871 fell off by £300,000, although the new mileage amounted to 150 miles. On the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Line there was only a slight decline on the whole year, which was being rapidly retrieved during the last quarter. On the other hand a moderate increase took place on the Great Indian Peninsular Railway, rising in the second half of the year to about nineteen and a quarter lakhs of rupees, or about £192,500. This rate of increase is still maintained.

ACCORDING to the latest telegrams from Calcutta, it appears that the Income-tax Bill imposing a charge of one per cent. on all incomes of Rs. 1,000 and upwards was passed at the meeting of the Legislative Council on the 17th April, after a long and searching debate. Every argument was of course employed against it by the independent members; but their votes were necessarily swamped by those of the Executive which has fallen in love not so much with the tax itself as with the machinery employed in its collection. It is a pity, as we have so often repeated, that a burden so unpopular and so hard on particular classes should still be imposed for so little compensating good. During the debate a good deal appears to have been said against the large cash balances retained in the Treasury; but Sir Richard Temple insisted that they were not at all too large.

IN a letter to the Times of Monday last Professor Cowell draws attention to a piece of seemingly unwise economy connected with the College in Calcutta of which he was formerly Principal. Ever since the Sanskrit College was first established in Calcutta in 1823, there has been attached to it a Chair of Smriti or Hindu Law. As the Sanskrit text-books in which that law is embodied are the ultimate authority on all points concerning inheritance, marriage, and adoption among Hindus, the need for such Professorship would seem to demonstrate itself, especially in view of the great inaccuracies pointed out by the late Dr. Goldstücker in the authorised translations of Hindu law-books. As far back however as 1859, an attempt was made by the Director of Public Instruction to abolish the Chair in question, but, thanks to Lord Canning's interference, it was made in vain. Mr. Campbell however, the present Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, appears to have seized the occasion of the old Professor's retirement to save £180 a-year by abolishing the office altogether. This seems to be about as reasonable a proceeding, as if in our own colleges the study of jurisprudence were to be confined to a few incomplete text-books on Modern English Law, without reference to the sources whence it grew into its present shape. Or, to take the analogy pointed out by the Professor himself, "what should we think of a Government in England which declared our authorised version of the Bible the only standard of appeal, and consequently abolished all Professorships of Greek and Hebrew in every Government College in the country?" This abolition of a Sanskrit Law Chair in a Sanskrit College looks very like an attempt to foist imperfect translations into the place hitherto reserved for the original text-books, in order that the faulty rulings sanctioned by the former may be perpetuated in spite of the clearer knowledge derivable from the latter. Henceforth the Hindu student is to remain content with such partial guidance as he may get from the Tagore Law Professor in the Calcutta University, "whose lectures will be mainly devoted to the various precedents of the last fifty years in the different law-courts," although some of these very precedents are founded on notorious misreadings of ancient Hindu law.

IN a joint note of condolence addressed to Lady Mayo the members of the Government which made Lord Mayo Viceroy have expressed their high admiration of her late husband. By the Queen herself, Lady Mayo has twice been addressed in terms of graceful sympathy; and to these proofs of regard her Majesty has just added another, by appointing Lord Mayo's widow Honorary Lady of her Bedchamber.

THE Society for promoting social progress in India held its first conversazione the Wednesday before last in the rooms of the Society of Female Artists in Conduit-street. It was largely attended by native gentlemen from India, so many of whom have taken a warm interest in the progress of a movement started for the praiseworthy purpose of drawing the two countries more closely together by means of a free exchange of social courtesies. It was a new and hopeful sight to see such a number of educated Indians—all of one sex indeed—mingling with the stream of English ladies and gentlemen, whose language many of them could speak as fluently as their Western friends. Such an experiment will help to convince the educated classes in India of our earnest desire to treat their countrymen as members of the great community over which Queen Victoria holds her benignant sway. Too much of course must not be expected from this or many meetings of the same kind; but that some good may insensibly flow from them, it is only reasonable to hope.

THE Persian Government seem to have been in as a great a hurry to report the end of the famine in Persia as they were to ignore its beginning. Some fair prospects of an early change for the better were indeed raised by the unusual severity of the last winter in that country; but Major Champain's recent letter to the Times warns us against any premature stoppage of the relief hitherto subscribed by the English public. In Bushire indeed he allows that English and Indian charity have helped materially to lessen the general distress; but in other cities away from the sea-coast "the misery continues, lightened only by the prospect of a fair harvest in June." The Shiraz Committee report that 3,000 persons have been left destitute by the death of the Governor of Fars, who had hitherto supported them. For the maintenance of these people alone three thousand pounds would not be too much. The London Committee has sent out for that purpose a thousand pounds, which is nearly all they have in hand. From Teheran Mr. Alison telegraphed on the 10th April that the greatest distress still prevailed there, and prices were rising daily. On that very day a large crowd was clamouring wildly for relief before the English Mission, and Mr. Alison feared that similar scenes would recur for some time to come. The London Committee have only five hundred pounds just now at their disposal, and, as Major Champain remarks, further aid will most likely be wanting, if the misstatements to which he refers be not speedily contradicted.

At length the Government has made up its slow if not reluctant mind to comply with the general demand for an additional grant of money to Lady Mayo. On Thursday evening Mr. Gladstone informed the House of Commons that, after much searching about for precedents and anxious weighing of arguments on this side and that, he had resolved to "take into consideration" the best way of carrying out the evident wishes not only of Parliament, but of the country at large, on this head. So far as any clear meaning can be extracted from a speech of unusual vagueness, it appears that the Ministry have surrendered their own scruples to the popular will. That we were not far wrong in crediting them with a desire to increase Lady Mayo's pension, if any increase should be deemed advisable, at India's expense, is pretty clear from what the Premier let fall on that point. Whether an attempt in that direction was really made or whether he only debated the propriety of making it, we may be thankful that India has for once escaped the honour of paying for England's shortcomings. Mr. Gladstone was rather less hazy in the matter of his unwillingness to contribute England's money in aid of the pension granted by the Indian Council. "We do not think it our duty," he said, "to carry our own opinion so far as to the point of resistance to the general desire." A wise conclusion which might as well have been reached a few weeks earlier. Mr. Osborne of course has agreed to withdraw his motion, and the Ministry, we trust, will lose no time in considering how and to what extent the India Office grant shall be supplemented from the Home Treasury. They need not distress themselves about precedents. Nobody expects them to repeat the lavish scale of the grant bestowed on Mr. Perceval's widow. The circumstances of the present case would be fairly met by the grant of another thousand a-year or its equivalent in ready money.

FREE PASSAGES TO OFFICERS AND FAMILIES.—The following extract from a letter No. 45, dated Feb. 1, 1872, from the Government of India in the Military Department, to the Quartermaster-general, is published for general information and guidance:—"A reference having been made by the Government of India in the Military Department, to the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, as to the claim to a free passage for themselves and families to England, and to the port of embarkation, of all officers of the British service who, to enable them to hold their appointments for the full term of five years, have been permitted to remain in India after the departure of their regiments, I am directed to acquaint you, for the information of the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief, that the claim has been admitted. Should therefore any officer, under the ruling laid down in para. 2 of my letter, No. 516, dated Dec. 13, 1870, have been refused free passages, I am to request that a refund may be made to them on properly supported bills being presented." 2. In accordance with the above sanction, all claims should be submitted to the Pay Department for adjustment.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, April 22, 1872.

THE EUPHRATES VALLEY RAILWAY.

MR. AINSWORTH's paper on the Euphrates Valley Railway, as reprinted from Colburn's Magazine, contains a careful and complete summary of the evidence laid last year before a Select Committee of the House of Commons on the rival schemes of railway across Asia Minor and Mesopotamia. As the whole of that evidence has already been summarised in the columns of this journal, there is no need for us to go over the old ground. Mr. Ainsworth, however, as an old authority on the subject, a witness before the Committee, and a former comrade of the late General Chesney in his famous exploration of the Euphrates Valley thirty-six years ago, has his own remarks to offer on many of the points at issue between rival witnesses and projectors. With regard, for instance, to the right point of departure from the Mediterranean, he insists from his own experience on the superior claims of Seleucia to those of Scanderoon, whether in respect of its own merits or of the country lying between it and Aleppo. That some line from the Mediterranean to the Persian Gulf must form a necessary link in any scheme for connecting Europe with the East, the whole of the evidence already taken tends clearly to prove. But whether the line should start from Seleucia or Scanderoon, whether it should run along the right bank of the Euphrates or the left bank of the Tigris, whether it should reach the Persian Gulf at Kowait, Basrah, Mohamrah, or Bushire, are questions more or less open to debate. On some or all of these points Mr. Ainsworth is a useful and well-informed guide.

Commenting on Mr. Telford Macneil's evidence in favour of Alexandretta, or Scanderoon, as the point of departure, he lays much stress on the engineering difficulties of a line thence through the Balan Pass, with gradients reckoned for part of the way in figures rivalling those of the railway over Mont Cenis. The top of the Pass—the Gates of Syria as it has been called—is little more indeed than two thousand feet high, but it consists of hard rock, and its sides for several miles would demand a gradient of one foot in thirteen. Scanderoon moreover is so unhealthy that few people can be induced to live there; it is a hotbed of fever and jaundice for Europeans, has never thriven as a port, and has hitherto baffled all attempts to drain its marshes of their deadly poison. From the Bay of Antioch on the other hand to the city of that name there is comparatively open country, with no hills higher than five hundred feet above the sea. Seleucia, founded by one of Alexander's successors, very soon supplanted his own port on the Bay of Issus as an outlet for the trade of Syria. It was an important city in the old Roman days, and its harbour, covering an area of forty-seven acres, equalled in size the East and West India Docks together. Thither used to flow the trade of which a scanty remnant now leaks out through Scanderoon. The valley of Antioch is remarkably healthy as well as fertile, and a railway through it would draw many settlers into "the most beautiful country in the world."

Mr. Ainsworth confirms Captain Charlewood's evidence as to the quality of the land along the banks of the Euphrates. Grassy alluvial plains called Hawi, many of which are cultivated, while all are arable, skirt the river on either side, often stretching some way inland. In fact "there is enough alluvial soil along the banks of the Euphrates to support millions." The local traffic involved in the costlier Tigris route would in time be far surpassed by that of the Euphrates Valley, which would gradually absorb the trade not only of Northern and Eastern Syria, but of all Mesopotamia, Babylonia, Chaldaea, and the countries beyond the Tigris. A line from the Euphrates to Baghdad, Dizful, and Bushire, would monopolise all the Persian traffic now borne by Poli and Trebizond.

Bushire is the terminus which Mr. Ainsworth, following Mr. Lynch and Sir John Macneil, would propose for the Euphrates Valley line. From Baghdad to Bushire the ground is for the most part firm and level, the line would pass through one of the most fertile provinces in Persia, and Bushire is as good a port as Kowait. Of Mohamra, on the Shat-al-Arab, Mr. Ainsworth thinks more favourably than Mr. W. Parkes, Consulting Engineer to the India Office, whose letter to Mr. W. P. Andrew on the ports of the Persian Gulf has just been published. Thirty miles nearer the sea than Basrah, it is still open to some of the objections which Mr. Parkes brings against the latter port. It may be, as Mr. Ainsworth describes it, the best port on the Shat-al-Arab; but for all that, it lies within the mouth of the Euphrates and its shoals.

Mr. Parkes indeed, who left Karachi last October to survey the Persian Gulf, passes over Bushire altogether, as lying outside the main end of his inquiries. Looking to "the one essential condition" of ready connection between the Persian Gulf and the Euphrates Valley Line, and having small faith in the early extension of that line to Persia, he finds the choice of a port practically limited to Basrah, Kor-Abdulla, and Kowait or Grane. Basrah is the centre of a considerable trade. It lies some way up the river, which is deep enough for the largest vessels that could cross the bar. As he starting-point for Indian steamers, it would save the cost of a railway to the actual shore of the Gulf. On the other hand, the depth of water on the bar at the river's mouth is only twelve feet at low tide, and the sixty miles of river between bar and port are navigable only in daylight. Mohamra, albeit thirty miles nearer the sea, suffers from the same objection. Kor-Abdulla, a little westward of the Shat-al-Arab, lies at the top of a funnel-shaped bay, narrowing gradually from eight miles to two, and showing a depth of three fathoms at the least, ranging sometimes up to six. The present charts, however, need revising before a final opinion can be fairly pronounced on the fitness of this port for mail steamers of large size. Its adoption would save the cost of some thirty-five miles of railway. According to present appearances, however, Mr. Parkes prefers Kowait to any other port. Kowait lies at the north-western extremity of the Persian Gulf, about seventy miles from Basrah. The bay is almost entirely land-locked, with a general depth of five or six fathoms, and soundings of twenty feet at less than a mile from shore. The hills that fringe the bay are not more than two or three hundred feet high, and slope in places very gradually to the shore. Nothing more than a short jetty is needed to make Kowait a better mail-station than Alexandria and Bombay as they are, or than Suez as it was three years ago, while an outlay of less than £100,000 would make it equal to Brindisi, Dover, or Suez as it now is. The cost of a railway from this point to Basrah would not be enhanced by any local difficulties, the intervening ground being mostly level. As for the navigation of the Persian Gulf, which is less than half the length of the Red Sea, Mr. Parkes thinks lightly of its real dangers as compared with those of the Red Sea. There are no coral reefs for one thing, no sudden changes of depth, and the aid of a light or two would make the voyage as safe and easy for large steamers as that of the Mediterranean itself. On this question Mr. Parkes is substantially at one with Sir H. Rawlinson and Mr. T. Macneil; and Mr. Ainsworth himself admits that Kowait is "indeed a fine, deep, yet open and healthy bay and roadstead, with a small Arab town inhabited by a well-disposed trading community."

WIFE DESERTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In your impression of the 1st inst. I noticed a letter headed, "Another Case of Wife Desertion," and signed "Lincoln's Inn." As I happen to know something of the parties referred to I may be perhaps allowed to state the plain facts of this deplorable case for the information of the Secretary of State for India and of the public at large.

In 1869 one Mirza Said Khan, half-brother of Mirza Abdool Ghiyas Khan, married an Englishwoman respectably connected. The wife was unaware at the time that her husband had contracted any previous marriage, and did not even know that his religion allowed of polygamy. Shortly after their marriage the husband went to Persia, leaving his wife, who has since given birth to an infant son, behind him, and she has received no maintenance whatever from him since his departure. On applying at the Persian Embassy, she learnt that, as her husband was a pensioner of the British Government the Persian authorities could not act in the matter, and an application to the Secretary of State for India was met by a similar refusal to interfere in her behalf. Said Khan does not in any way dispute the legality of his marriage, and his wife's character is acknowledged to be irreproachable. Surely the Indian authorities might interfere and appropriate some portion of the husband's pension for the maintenance of the distressed mother and her child, if only to act as a wholesome lesson to the numerous Indians whom the Civil Service and the Bar yearly bring to this country, and who appear to think that they may with impunity ruin any unsuspecting Englishwoman who is foolish enough to allow herself to be betrayed into marriage, and then seek refuge from the consequences of such marriage in the shelter of another code of laws and religion. There is good precedent for Government interference in such cases. In Allen's Indian Mail of January 24 and February 14, 1871, will be found an account of a certain Syed Ahmud Ally, falsely styling himself a Nawab, who married an English wife in Calcutta, and on coming subsequently to England, divorced her in the free and easy way which Mahomedan law allows, for no other reason but that "he was tired of her." In this case the wife petitioned the home authorities, and his Grace the Duke of Argyll, with his usual justice and humanity, allotted to the unfortunate woman £200 per annum to be paid out of her husband's pension. It is bad enough for India, groaning as it is under heavy and unpopular imposts, to have to support a set of idle and dissolute Nawabs without throwing upon English ratepayers the burden of supporting those who are reduced to destitution by the crimes of these gentry. When the pensions of such gay Oriental Lotharios are in the hands of the Government, the authorities have a powerful check upon their movements, which it would be well to employ a little more often.

There is another matter to which I cannot help alluding. On the 8th inst. I read with much interest the amusing letter of Professor Syed Abdoollah upon the unceremonious manner in which Governors-General are now despatched to their posts. The Oriental mind is not constituted precisely like our own, and cannot regard the abolition of State pomp and ceremonies with the same supreme indifference. Hospitality is reckoned the greatest virtue in the East, and I am afraid that Indians may view our shortcomings in this respect as an evidence of national decadence, and may regard the discontinuance of those sumptuous banquets with which John Company was wont to entertain his high officials as proof of the gradual failing of the public purse. They cannot understand how it is that the entertainment of Lord Northbrook, the Vicegerent of the Mighty Queen, the Ruler of the Sultans of the Earth, should have been left to the Mayor of Winchester, who is in their eyes but a mere Magistrate sahib, or a sort of village-sheikh.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

E. H. PALMER.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICES.

The Indian Daily News remarks that the Duke of Argyll has firmly and finally accepted the principle that the higher appointments under the Indian Government should be filled exclusively by covenanted officers, and that the lower appointments should be recruited entirely from the native community. The fact that a Secretary of State can chalk out a principle such as this one, and compel its adoption in this country, in spite of the opposition of the Government in India, may well induce us to despair; for it not merely exhibits in the worst possible light the evils of an irresponsible despotism, but also displays a reckless disregard for the highest interests of this country. We are willing to admit that it is not very desirable that a large independent European community should grow up within this country, and that the presence of Europeans in the uncovenanted service contributes indirectly but surely to the growth of such a community. But this admission cannot alter the fact, that large numbers of persons of European extraction already exist in the country, which many of them look on as their home, and in which there is no career open to them except in the service of Government. Such of their number as possess or have acquired independent resources have profitably engaged in commerce or trades; but the great majority of them belong to families which live from hand to mouth, and are compelled to find occupation in or near the localities where they are born. What is to become of these people when the uncovenanted service is closed against them.

THE EVILS OF ARMY AMALGAMATION.

The Indian Daily News observes that the mutiny of the sepoy army was one expression of a widespread feeling of dissatisfaction, which has truly been called the great Indian rebellion—a feeling which openly exhibited itself wherever the black man dared to lift up his hand against the white man, which led to murders and nameless outrages in every northern Indian bazaar, and which threw open the gates of every jail in the actual scenes of the disturbances. It has been well said that the general feeling of dissatisfaction was so intense that it even overcame the kindly feeling which notoriously existed between the officers and men of the Honourable East India Company's army. Now, if there be any truth in this remark—and we believe that there is a deep philosophic truth in it, a truth which goes to the roots of the loyalty of all mercenary troops—it means that if anything could have held back our native army from joining in the general rebellion against English power it would have been the kindly feeling that subsisted between the English officers and their men; that the discipline of the old army was defective to the extent to which it failed to create a kindly feeling which was sufficiently powerful to prevent the men from turning against their officers and the Government whom they represented; and that our hopes for the future lay in the discovery of a system which would atone for the deficiencies of the old army by supplementing the policy which had united officers and men, but had not united them by a sufficiently strong bond, with some policy which would in future bind the officers and men together by an indissoluble bond. If this was the condition which it remained for army reform in India to fulfil, we need expend no labour in demonstrating that it not only remains unfulfilled at the present day, but, moreover, that every step actually taken has been taken in precisely the opposite direction. In the army of the East India Company the ensign came out to a sort of family club, in which he generally lived and died, sharing all its glories and its reverses, and regarded both by his superior officers and the men below him as a person who belonged to them, and whose history was identified with their own. Was the friendly feeling, such as it was, that existed between officers and men in the old Army, an evil which required to be suppressed, or an element of good which required to be fully developed? On the honest solution of this question depends the justification or condemnation of the amalgamation. The fact, which is most undoubted, is that the amalgamation and its attendant train of compromises have not only dissipated what intimate kindly relations there once existed between officers and men, but rendered any revival of these relations impracticable by any means which fall short of a complete resurrection of a local army.

RIOTOUS PROCESSIONS.

The Bombay Gazette shrinks from advocating a policy which is thus expressed by M. Vambéry in a letter to the Times:—"Not disregard or offence but undue tolerance and impartiality are the chief motives of the disorder and the ferocious crimes committed lately by the Mahometans, and which may grow still worse if vigilance and proper measures do not arrest them." We have been so weak and gentle that what Mr. Grant Duff is fond of calling in his boastful way the Pax Britannica has come to mean toleration for disorders which in any European State would be sternly repressed. Take, for instance, the scenes that have been witnessed in Bombay this week during the days of the Mohurrum. All business has been suspended; the peaceable majority of the population has been kept in a constant state of alarm; the whole police force and several companies of soldiers have been obliged to remain on duty night and day without intermission, because the Government does not choose to prohibit so-called religious processions in which no respectable Mussulmans take part, and which serve as the excuse for the wildest excesses of drunkenness and riot amongst the riff-raff of the Mahometan population. It is quite evident to any one who has seen the taboots carried down to the sea that the whole ceremony is ludicrously inconsistent with the principles of the Mahometan religion. No strict Mussulman will have a picture or statue of the human figure in his house; and Mr. Shaw, in his recently published book on Eastern Turkistan, mentions that even on a valuable cup presented to him by Yakoob Beg's Vizier the Chinese carving had been defaced because it represented the human countenance. But in Bombay the Sunis who during the Mohurrum triumph over and ridicule in their processions the Shias or Moguls—for the term "Mogul" is on this side of India used curiously enough to denote the Persians, as opposed to the Turkish or Suni Mahometans—are so thoroughly Hindooised that they adorn the taboots which are supposed to commemorate the murder of Hassan and Hoosein with images of men, women, children, birds, and beasts, till it is hard to make out whether they are Mussulmans or idolaters. But, without interfering with the religion of the Sunis, the British Government has a right, and is bound, in justice to the rest of the community, to insist that their religious ceremonies shall be conducted decently and in order at their own mosques, and not in the open streets by means of frenzied dances of half-naked, evil-looking ruffians, whose insulting cries are intended to excite the other section of the Mahometan population, the Shias, to riot and bloodshed. No religious processions likely to provoke a breach of the peace are permitted in Ireland; why, then, should they be tolerated in India? All such displays have a tendency to encourage the growth of fanaticisms; and we believe there is still time for the English Government in this country to save the well-disposed Mussulmans from being carried away by the impulse that a few fanatics, when unchecked, may give to a whole society. The Government must give more active help to the friends of order, or it will force them into the opposite ranks; and there is nothing that would rejoice the hearts of men who have everything to lose by political changes, more than such manifestations of strength on the part of the State as would compel even the most eager malcontents to walk warily, and to refrain from active agitation. At present, "say and do what you will," seems to be the motto of the Government in its dealings with its Indian subjects.

Now they have peace and pastime, and the licence till some dire catastrophe occurs, when the authorities will be surprised beyond measure at the consequences of their own policy of credulity.

To revel and to rail—

THE MORTGAGE LAW.

The Punjab Times regards this law as only another instance of that fatal mischievous activity in legislation that is fast wearing the whole country from our rule. We could not conceive a more dangerous tampering with the peace of the country than any legislation which should have for its sole object the more easy transfer of landed property from the landholder to the money lender. We have seen within a few years a contented people becoming irritated year by year by obnoxious imposts, new and strange taxes, new and incomprehensible laws, overturning their old ideas of right and wrong. We have seen the once independent Zemindar become a querulous litigant in our petty courts, or what is worse, a cringing supplicant for mercy from the usurer. It only requires that the proprietors should now be informed that we are trying to help these usurers in dispossessing them of the homes of their fathers to turn a people still loyal away from us for ever. Let our rulers pause in time. Give us breathing space in this lawyer's scramble. Prorogue the Legislative Council for at least a year, and our new Viceroy will have every assurance that his advent will coincide with a return of confidence both in the children of the soil and their foreign conquerors.

A NEW REVELATION.—An up-country young Brahmin has come from the North-Western Provinces to Howrah, and taken up his residence under ground in Seebpore. He has dug a hole for himself of six square feet, with an opening for entrance and exit of one square foot. There he remains all day engaged in prayers. He has brought twelve disciples with him, and they meet him at night. If asked as to his mission, he replies that he has been commissioned by Bramah to act in this manner, and Bramah will soon make his appearance for the purpose of dispensing reward to the good and punishment to the wicked.—Englishman.

BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION.

The British Indian Association in Calcutta has had its twentieth annual field day, under the presidency of Baboo Romanath Tagore. There was, as usual on such occasions, a good deal of "speechifying," which was led off by Baboo Kissory Chund Mittra. He represented in eloquent language the various raison d'être of the Association in England, chief of which was that it acts the part of her Majesty's Opposition, "checking the improper operation" of Government, "while it fosters and stimulates their healthy action." The Association is credited with having done something during the past year to check "galloping" legislation, and to preserve the "old and high civilisation of the country, though that civilisation is admitted to be neither progressive nor diffusive." Parliament was petitioned regarding the Road Cess and the Indian Finance Committee—which seems to have been about all the Association did during the year. We presume they wanted the Road Cess disallowed, and we know they wanted a deputation from the Finance Committee to be sent to India to make enquiries on the spot, when Baboo Shama Churn Dey and others who know too much could not well be kept out of the way. This eloquent Baboo (Kissory, not Shama) got himself into hot water for confessing that he had voted for the suppression of obscene nude figures in the temple of Juggernath at Pooree—upon which subject Government had solicited the advice of the Association. He said:—"Believing as I do that we represent not the bigotry or superstition, but the advancement and enlightenment of the country, I voted for the suppression. But the antiquarian and archaeological predilections of my honourable friend, Baboo Rajendro Lalla Mittra, overruled the proceedings." His friend Baboo Rajendro Lalla Mittra was on his legs in a minute, and punished him severely. "The feeling of those who objected to the figures was (he said) akin to that of the lady who was shocked at Martin Chuzzlewit, alluding to 'naked eyes,' and he could not for a moment sympathise with them. The question was one of grave importance, and it did not concern a few ornamental figures, but the whole system of Hindu religion. At least one-third of the Hindu population of India worshipped the Lingam, and the law recommended by Mr. Beames, the Collector of Balasore, who mooted the question, would lead to the suppression of every temple of Mahadeb in the country; such wholesale suppression of every trace of public worship might or might not be a gain to morality, but it would by no means be fair or just to the people. He had no sympathy whatever with the worshippers of the phallus, but he never could support the use of force for the suppression of his neighbour's religion, however false or mistaken it may be. Good sense, fair play, liberal policy, and the right of freedom of thought would all rebel against such a use of force—even Kalapahar of infamous memory would be ashamed of it." That speech must have been prepared beforehand. The publication of the financial statement of the year, before Budget day, was strongly advocated; as likewise the maintenance of a chair of Hindu law in the Sanscrit College. Representations were made as to the exceeding sinfulness of robbing a poor Hindu of his holidays, and Mahomedan feast days were suggested for curtailment instead. On the whole, the annual meeting of the British Association is not likely to be productive of much harm.—Times of India.

STATION TALK.

N. W. PROVINCES, March 16.—From Bareilly, the learned capital of Rohilkund, to the city of Budaon, great reaches of wheat land extend along the valley of the Ram-Gunga-jee. In some parts, you may say, without greatly straining a figure, that you are out of sight of land in an ocean of wheat—wheat at its full height, like great rolling billows, stretching to the horizon on every side. You begin to wonder how gaunt famine can ever visit a land bearing such glorious harvests. Villages and palm-trees here and there, like islands and islets, alone interrupt the uniformity of the wheat sea. Imagine several of the weaker sex in a movable camp, and with a sporting party, armed (that is, the sportsmen) with double-barrelled guns and rifles, and bent on the destruction of deer, pea-fowl, geese, ducks, teal, mallard, shieldrakes, pigeons, quail, and all sorts of edible game, found literally in thousands! I cannot get over the feeling that the sport is cruel, but this you will think nonsense. Well, no doubt, many men, and even some women, seem to be hunters by nature; and I admit that the creatures intended for food must be killed in some way, and that the poor people's crops are benefited by the sacrifice of black bucks and feathered fowls. At all events, the open-air life is healthful and invigorating; and one picks up new ideas, and passes through new experiences. But complexions! Alas! they become brown as heathen, and encourage doubts as to our descent. All the world hereabout is nearly mad on the subject of "badminton," the new-fashioned game of shuttlecock across a rope. Anything for a change after years of interminable croquet! There was very heavy rain with thunder and lightning yesterday in some parts of the country, but only a few drops fell where we happened to be. The day, however, was cool and cloudy. There is a deal of hot and almost furious discussion among the gentlemen on the expediency or otherwise of blowing the wretched Kukas from guns. Some declare that the promptness and severity of the punishment prevented a widespread rebellion; but others maintain that the circumstances did not justify such haste, and that whatever was necessary should have been done deliberately and with all the forms of law. Sometimes I agree with the one side, and then, after hearing a persuasive argument, I am inclined to go over to the other. The question is not without difficulty. Of course we are all in favour of humane measures where they are safe. But the question of safety is not so easily settled in the midst of such a confusion of earnest tongues as I have been listening to. But my tent is going to be struck; so I must send you this shabby scrap or none. If you only saw our gamebags!—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

PORT BLAIR.—A contemporary informs us that the soldier of H.M.'s 2-10th Regiment who was wounded by Shere Ali while on sentry over him at Port Blair is still in hospital from the effects of the blow.

THE WEATHER.—It is stated that the weather is at present hotter than it has been in March within human recollection. The change, too, was unusually rapid; in a day or two we passed from December to June.—Friend of India.

A TALE FOR THE MARINES.—It is stated in an up-country journal that somewhere near Akbarpore, in the district of Fyzabad, a boy was found in the den of a wolf, and has been brought to the dispensary. The boy cannot speak, is very lean and emaciated, likes to live in retired places, and devours raw meat!

ENGLISH LADIES LEARN BENGALÉE.—The Indian Mirror says:—"The ties between England and India are being daily brought so close that even English ladies in London have learnt to correspond in Bengalee with their sisters in India. We have seen several remarkable specimens of this correspondence, at least so far as the caligraphy is concerned. Great credit is due to the English ladies for the rapidity with which they have learnt to write Bengalee."

AN OVERSIGHT.—The Indian Observer accuses, and apparently with reason, some of the district officers in Bengal of not knowing that trees grow after being planted. It seems that when orders were lately received for the planting of avenues along the public roads, these gentlemen, taking advantage of the straight lines ready to their hand in the telegraph posts, planted their young trees under the wires. The wires are now in the middle of the trees, and the Telegraph Department is desperately out of temper.

RHEA GRASS PREPARED IN THE DHOON.—The Agra paper informs us that "the Rhea grass prepared by machinery in the Dhoon has been thoroughly tested by spinners at home, and highly approved of by them. They report it actually better for their process and purposes than the best hand-prepared grass of the description from Hankow. It gives sixty per cent. of tops suitable for mixing with silk for dress-pieces, the remainder being admirably adapted for combining with wools or merinos. It takes dye better even than the China produce."

THE RAILWAY BRIDGE AT ALLAHABAD.—The vexed question of a bridge over the East Indian Railway at Allahabad has come to a deadlock. The work was estimated to cost £15,000, and as the Railway Company refused to contribute anything towards a work "the necessity of which to the company was not apparent," and the income of the Allahabad Municipality is quite inadequate to defray the charge, the Imperial Government was applied to for a loan. This, however, the Government has refused to grant, and the matter is left for disposal as a proposed local or provincial work under the Lieutenant-Governor's orders.—Englishman.

STATE RAILWAY TO INDORE.—We see from the supplement to the last Gazette of India that the Government have finally determined on carrying the railway from Khandwa to Indore via the Choralghat as originally recommended to Mr. Campbell. The railway is to be made throughout capable of being worked by locomotive power. The entire length of eighty-six miles of metre gauge is estimated to cost £751,000, including £200,000 for a bridge of about half a mile in length across the Narbadda. Including rolling stock, stations, and machinery, and engineering establishments, the line is expected to cost £900,000.

AN INGENIOUS CHART.—We have had before us for some time a most ingenious chart constructed by Captain W. L. Yonge, R.A., by which, the latitude being known, the hour of sunrise or of sunset at any place in the northern or southern hemisphere can be ascertained by simply joining two points on the diagram, and producing the straight line thus obtained. Conversely, the hour of sunrise or sunset being ascertained by observation, the latitude may be discovered from the chart; and by converting into local mean time the apparent time ascertained from the chart, and comparing the result with a chronometer, the longitude can be found. This chart should be a great boon to masters of ships, whom it will enable in many cases to dispense with the nautical almanac.—Englishman.

LUCKNOW VOLUNTEERS.—Sixty Bengalis, residents of Lucknow, have offered to enrol themselves as members of the Lucknow Volunteer Rifles.—Englishman, March 18.

SMALL-POX.—Small-pox appears to be spreading in the Central Provinces, though in the Saugor district what was reported a fortnight ago as small-pox turns out to be chicken-pox.

FAREWELL DINNER TO MR. COURT.—Mr. Major Henry Court, C.S.I., formerly so long and so popular here (Allahabad) as Commissioner of the Division, was entertained at a large farewell dinner at the club on Friday, the 22nd March. Mr. Court carries with him to England all that should accompany a high public servant on his retirement—universal respect for his official character, and the warm regard of “troops of friends.”—Pioneer.

MR. CLARK'S FAREWELL DINNER.—Mr. Clark, chief engineer to the Municipality, gave a farewell dinner to all his European subordinates on Saturday evening, previous to his departure for England on sick leave. The entertainment was given in one of the municipal engine-sheds measuring sixty feet of a span in an arch by ten inches in depth of brick, the first of the size that has been built in India. The room was decorated with evergreens and flowers and various flags. About forty guests sat down to dinner, and rose about nine o'clock. The utmost hilarity and good-feeling prevailed during the whole of the entertainment.—Englishman, March 25.

THE STATUE OF LORD LAWRENCE FOR CALCUTTA.—The design for the bronze statue of Lord Lawrence, which is to grace this city of palaces, has been approved of by the Sub-Committee in London, and the eminent artist, Mr. Woolner, A.R.A., will shortly commence upon his big work. He has just completed a statue in white marble of Sir Bartle Frere. Mr. Foley, it is said, has on hand more orders than he could execute in a longer life-time than any which generally falls to the lot of man. Mr. Woolner is likely, therefore, to obtain some of the late orders for statues which have been voted in different parts of India.—Englishman.

EAST INDIA RAILWAY OFFICIALS.—The recent reductions and weedings of the East India Railway Officials and employes have had the most beneficial effect. On all sides we hear a larger attention, more civility, less drunkenness, great order, and therefore more comfort to the public along the line. We trust this excellent plan may become a permanent one on all our Indian lines.—Weeding every five years means justice, not only to the bad, but also the good servant. Promotion on the one hand, and removal on the other, are the levers by which the character of all large bodies of men may be raised.—Indian Daily News.

A DIVORCE CASE.—A suit for dissolution of marriage has been instituted in the High Court of the North-Western Provinces by Captain Wetherall, of the 1st Royals. The co-respondent is Lieutenant Thorp, of the same regiment. The petitioner also prayed that the Court would order the custody of his infant son to be made over to him pending the suit. The Court directed that Mrs. Wetherall should produce the child in court, and show cause why it should not be made over to the husband. Mr. Jardine, the Government Advocate, appears for the petitioner. The occurrences which gave rise to the case are said to have taken place at Shahjehanpore.—Pioneer.

THE MARRIAGE BILL.—The leading members of the Mahomedan community in Calcutta have submitted a memorial to the Legislature, in which they express their “fullest concurrence” in the objections advanced against the Marriage Bill by Mr. Inglis, and they quote from the hon. member's speech the now famous argument about “designing parties entrapping young lads of family position infatuated with some dancing girl.” The memorialists contend that apostates from Mahomedanism getting married under the Act should, on reverting to Mahomedanism, be allowed to divorce their wives and marry again according to the rites of Islam.—Indian Mirror.

FAMINE.—A correspondent writing to the Delhi Gazette from the Hills North of Deyra says:—“The accounts of famine from the interior are truly heartrending; the puharees in some districts have taken to eating roots and digging up those of the kujoor (date palm), which when dried can be converted by grinding into an eatable flour! In more than one place between Teres and this, individuals have perished from hunger by the way-side unable to reach this; thousands of maunds of wheat are being expected daily from this, which has already sensibly affected the prices of flour here. Purtaub Shai, the legal heir to the Gurwal kingdom, is most generously distributing money amongst his ryots to buy grain.”

PROHIBITORY TELEGRAPH RATES.—To the Editor of the Englishman.—“Sir,—In the Home News of 23rd of February last, under the heading of “Money Market,” I notice that from and after the 1st March instant, the China Submarine Telegraph Company have reduced their charge for messages from London to Hong Kong from £7 to £4. 6s.; from London to Shanghai, from £8. 5s. to £4. 5s.; from London to Japan, from £9. 5s. to £5. 6s. Will not the Indian papers, who ought to be backed by the Chamber of Commerce of the three presidencies, led by that of the “Bengal,” agitate for the reduction of the prohibitory charges existing between London and India? If they fail in India, they ought to carry it on through the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, who do take care to make themselves heard by the Secretary of State for India. I need not assure you that you will deserve the thanks and gratitude of all India.—A CALCUTTA MERCHANT.—Calcutta, March 18.”

THE LOSHAI FORCE.—The following is the latest news of the Loshai Force:—The steamer Undaunted, with the Guide in tow, arrived from Chittagong on the 26th instant, having on board about four hundred coolies under Captain Nash, 2nd Gurkhas. The Himalaya, with the Head Quarters of the 2nd Gurkhas, arrived yesterday. We hear there are very few sick amongst the coolies, although it is easy to see that they have had no light work of it. The 27th Regiment Punjab Native Infantry are expected to arrive on the 5th April. The 22nd Regiment Native Infantry passed through Calcutta en route to Jhilmam on the 26th instant.—Englishman, March 29th.

THE NEW ADVOCATE-GENERAL.—There has this week been a good deal of criticism of the appointment of Mr. Cunningham as Advocate General. Men of more experience and prior claims are hinted at. As in the case of Mr. Campbell's appointment of Mr. Bernard, we hold that the office of Advocate General had to be filled on the responsibility of those on whom the appointment rested. If Mr. Cunningham had been a weak or inefficient man then there would have been ground for the complaints. But nobody has rested the complaints on these grounds, or, as far as we can see, on any grounds that invalidate the appointment. With respect to Mr. Cunningham's ability and fitness for the office an article in the Pioneer of last Saturday is to our view conclusive in his favour; and it is not by any means a partisan article. Of course there are opinions as to the best man for such a position, but there must be some choice left to those on whom an appointment devolves.—Friend of India.

POLICE.—With one fell swoop of his pen the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has sealed the fate of all the Assistant District Superintendents of Police. His Honour declares that District Superintendents should have no assistants unless in exceptionally heavy or difficult districts, and that their most practical assistants are the inspectors. As at present advised, then, the Lieutenant-Governor does not propose to appoint any more new Assistant Superintendents, but to absorb those who are fit for it in the Subordinate Executive Service of the regulation and non-regulation provinces. If in any district, under exceptional circumstances, it is necessary to employ an officer as Assistant to the District Superintendent, an officer of the Subordinate Executive Service may be specially so employed, and for the appointment of District Superintendent either officers of the Subordinate Executive Service or junior Civilians will be eligible.—Indian Mirror.

PAY OFFICE.—The Indian Daily News says:—“Colonel Harrison, 1st Pay Examiner, left on Sunday night for Bombay to enjoy his well-earned furlough, after nearly ten years continuous hard work in Calcutta. He is succeeded by Colonel Williams, who after winding up the accounts of the Umballa Pay Office, now abolished, took over charge of the Examiner's Office on Tuesday, March 26. Colonel Osborn, second Pay Examiner, is now about to proceed to Simla on special duty with Mr. Kellner, and he will be succeeded by Colonel Cockburn from Allahabad; the place of the latter there as Circle Paymaster being filled by Colonel Anderson, who formerly belonged to the Pay Department. Colonel Allan is acting as Deputy Paymaster in the Presidency Circle, and proceeds next week to Bhaugulpore and Dinapore, to pay the native pensioners within those districts. Captain Cowper has officiated as Examiner of the Ordnance and Marine Accounts since the lamented death of Major Leonard, and will be probably confirmed in that appointment. But until the anticipated grading of the whole Pay Department in India is published, with all its details, it is impossible to say what the ultimate arrangements may be.”

THE LOSHAI EXPEDITION.—An officer on whose opinion we have the utmost reason to rely writes:—“I was sorry to see in the Friend the disparaging view taken by such an authority as your correspondent ‘M.’ of the Loshai Expedition, and its probable results. Depend upon it had the Expedition not been undertaken, the tea cultivation of Cachar would have been paralysed, for men would no longer have invested capital in buildings liable at any moment to be burned down, or imported coolies to be carried into captivity by the Loshai. The expense of maintaining a frontier force, and keeping it supplied in remote positions (herein was the real difficulty) would have been interminable, and would soon have amounted to the cost of the present expedition. And the results could never have been as permanent as those which, in my opinion, have now been accomplished.” We thoroughly agree with this opinion, and think our correspondent's view, for once, altogether incorrect. The expedition was an absolute necessity. It has been admirably carried out, and with most important results—notice, for instance, that General Nuttall alone, with a native contingent disheartened by being so long unemployed, has himself freed 2,000 captives—a star of honour for the gallant General as long as he lives. We hope for him, however, among others, another recognition equally dear to a soldier.—Friend of India.

LORD MAYO'S MURDER.—From the letter of a correspondent who has had considerable experience in responsible Staff appointments we extract the following remarks on the precautions adopted at the Andamans on the memorable 8th of February, and on the plot theory:—“From all the remarks I have seen about the steps taken to protect Lord Mayo, I must say I don't think proper precautions were taken. Of course I am speaking as one at a distance, but I think the proper precautions would have been not so much to have guards round his person, but to have had guards over every convict, not allowing a man to leave his lines or barracks, and to have a roll call every half-hour. Of course, then, a very small guard with the Viceroy would have sufficed, for if every man had been kept to his barracks, there would have been little to guard against; that is my humble opinion. Do you recollect its being mentioned that two men were going up to the Viceroy on his return from Mount Harriet when they were stopped? I am not at all sure that Shere Ali was not one of those men, and that the petition was a mere pretext to get near him then to stab him. If Shere Ali was not one of those two men, then I believe they were up to mischief, whoever they were, and that there was a plot in the affair somehow. Has this idea ever struck you, that it would be well to know who those two men were, and what their castes? I wish you could find out, for I look upon this fact as very important; what say you? If Shere Ali was not one of those two men, but the two men were Shere Ali's caste, no doubt he had accomplices, and that it was a plot, and not the fanaticism of one man. Shere Ali ought to have his hands chopped off and his tongue cut, and be turned out into the world like Cain, with a mark on him as a warning to his brethren. It would be a far greater punishment than hanging."

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, March 29.—A better demand is being experienced for Grey Goods and Yarns, and prices have rather a hardening tendency. Bleached Goods are also in fair inquiry, particularly Mulls and Jaconets, but there is no improvement to note in values. Grey Twist: The market closes fairly active. Coloured Twist: The demand for Turkey Red shows symptoms of reviving.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, March 29.—Jute is dull, and has been principally shipped on owners' accounts. Saltpetre has been quiet, without change. Rice, for Europe, no demand. Linseed: Supplies small, but prices unchanged. Silk: Sellers stand out for too high rates, but Commercials are coming to the market, and a fall is expected.

Madras.

WYNAAD.—Foot and mouth disease is raging at present among the cattle in the Wynaad. The disease appears to have been introduced by Brijarjee's cattle passing from Mysore to the coast.

ROBBERS IN UNIFORM.—A correspondent in the Madras Mail informs our contemporary that when walking the other evening down the Broadway three soldiers of H.M.'s 21st Fusiliers accosted him and insisted on his giving them some liquor. Not caring to have a row, he informed them that he had very little money with him, upon which one of the soldiers thrust his hands into his waistcoat pocket and extracted what there was!

RAILWAYS.—The local Government have submitted, for the sanction of the Government of India, an estimate of Rs. 12,87,381, received from the Agent and Manager of the Madras Railway, for substituting iron bowl for wooden sleepers on the 4th Division of the South-West Line, between Muddikerry and Beypore, exclusive of the seven miles of the Coimbatore ghaut and the sidings at the Muddikerry station, the sleepers to be similar to those now in use on our North and South-West lines. Of the total amount of the estimate now submitted, namely, Rs. 12,87,381, Rs. 3,18,577 is chargeable to Capital, and Rs. 9,68,804 to Revenue.
